Airport Head Puts Closing Of Road Up To Congress

Corporation Indicates It Will Not Purchase Highway.

Bills Introduced To Authorize Sale

Game of Bluff Continues With Arlington as Eventual Winner.

The National Airport Corporation last night returned to Congress the responsibility of deciding whether Military road in Arlington County is to be closed, and under what terms.

Following an executive conference with his directors, Samuel J. Solomon, vice president and general manager of the Washington Airport, issued a statement intimating that the next move was up to Congress.

Identical bills which would force the airport corporation to buy the strip of roadway adjacent to the flying field for $50,000 or else see it disposed of at auction to the highest bidder were introduced in the Senate and House yesterday.

With the date of closing the airport to public air transportation by order of the Department of Commerce unchanged, the controversy over the terms under which the road should be closed appeared to have resolved itself into a game of bluffing between Congress and the airport, with Arlington County ready to benefit in either case.

Position Restated.

Solomon's brief statement restated a section of his letter to Secretary of Commerce Roper, in which the corporation was pledged to "co-operate with you and the Bureau of Air Commerce in any suggestion that may be made for proper control of traffic by legal means."

It then added this comment:

"Any further course of action on the part of National Airport Corporation with respect to Washington Airport will depend upon legislation enacted by the Congress of the United States."

Solomon declined to amplify the statement, but it was expected that the Senate and House Military Affairs Committees will hasten action on the pending bills today. The National Airport Corporation directors apparently decided they would not accept the terms fixed by Arlington County for withdrawal of its opposition to the closing of the road unless these terms become a law of Congress.

Bills Provide for Sale.

There is nothing in the pending bills to compel the National Airport Corporation to buy the portion of Military Road bordering the field, but definite provision is made instructing the Secretary of War to close and dispose of the roadway to a buyer.

The measures provide that the Secretary of War as his first move shall maintain barricades, stop lights, guards, watchmen, or any other precautions along Military Road at the expense of the airport. If the latter refuses to pay the cost, it will be prohibited from using any portion of the highway.

A second section states that upon payment of $50,000 to Arlington County by the National Airport Corporation, the War Department shall quit claim to the airport corporation that portion of Military Road running from Highway Bridge to the line of the railway tracks between the Alexandria railway yards and Rosslyn.

If the airport owners fail to make this payment, the Secretary of War is instructed to sell the roadway at auction to the highest bidder but not for less than $50,000. No provision is made for disposal of the $50,000 in such an event.

Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, predicted that the Senate bill will be reported favorably by the Senate Military Affairs Committee today and may even be called up for a vote on the floor.

Chairman McSwain, of the House Military Affairs Committee, called a meeting for this morning, but would not predict how soon the bill

McSwain Seeks Corps of 4,000 Planes by 1938

Plans for Modernizing 14 Battleships Also Pushed on Capitol Hill.

By the Associated Press.

An Administration plan for modernizing 14 of the Navy's 15 battleships was pressed yesterday on Capitol Hill, dovetailing with demands for vastly augmented land and air defenses.

Three members of the Navy high command appeared before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee to request not only improvement of the battleships but two aircraft carriers as well. The admirals urged also that provision be made for construction of 221,000 tons of auxiliary vessels to carry ammunition and supplies.

Almost simultaneously, Chairman McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina, of the House Military Committee told the House that Congress should bring the Army's air strength up to 4,000 planes by 1938.

Air Defense Pushed.

His proposal interrupted a speech by Representative Dockweiler (Democrat), California, urging greater spending for national defense. Before the House as he spoke was the largest Army appropriation bill ever requested in peacetime, calling for the spending of more than half a billion dollars in the 1937 fiscal year.

Although conceding that a rush of amendments might delay the bill, House leaders nevertheless sought to push it to the Senate by tonight.

In still another quarter, Representative Wilcox (Democrat), Florida, a member of the House Military Committee, after a conference with War Department officials, said he would press for an appropriation at this session to start construction of the frontier air defense system authorized by the last Congress.

The Wilcox authorization act provides for six air defense bases at strategic points designated by the Secretary of War. A special War Department board has completed an investigation of possible sites and made recommendations to Secretary Dern in a tentative report, which is now being revised for submission to Congress.

McSwain told the House he would seek to amend the War Department bill to provide for 800 planes a year for five years in place of the authorization for 565 planes carried in the pending War Department supply measure.

Only 1,060 Planes on Hand.

McSwain's call for 4,000 planes set a new high, as the Army board headed by Newton D. Baker had recommended a maximum of only 2,300. On December 2, 1935, the War Department reported the Air Corps had only 1,060 planes on hand.

The officers before the Senate Committee were Rear Admirals John K. Taussig, acting chief of naval operations; Emory S. Land, chief of the bureau of construction and repairs, and E. J. King, chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics.

Taussig asserted the modernization program was for "entirely defensive" purposes, but added modernization of the battleships Oklahoma, New York and the Texas would not be carried out if a new treaty permitted their replacement.

This 'Bird in the Hand' Put Duck's Savior to Lot of Grief

Wild Life Enthusiast Only Trying to Succor Starving Mallard, But the Police Just Wouldn't Believe Him.

Frank Bertram Levy, 32, a mechanical engineer by vocation and a wild life enthusiast by avocation, is a man of strong feelings, particularly where animals and birds are concerned.

That is why he "kidnaped" a wild duck last Sunday and got into some temporary trouble with the United States Park Police.

The police reports says that Levy "had one duck on person.' But here is the rest of the story, as it came to light last night:

Levy, with a companion, went for a hike along the ice-covered Potomac River. Their journey took them down the Mount Vernon Memorial boulevard, off which is the Federal bird sanctuary of Roaches Run.

Birds in Ice Breach.

"The waters of the sanctuary seemed to be frozen over," Levy told The Post last night, "and I noticed there were no ducks there. Then I found out why. They were out in the river—out in an open space in the ice. There were about 2,000 of them—mallards, canvasbacks, goldeneyes, pintails and black ducks.

"We started sneaking up on them to make photographs. They went up in a cloud; that is, most of them did. But there were about 100 of them that couldn't get up. They were starving to death. There were a lot of them around, in fact, that already had starved to death.

"I felt pretty bad about it. On the way back, we stumbled across a mallard that was too weak to walk. I picked it up, thinking to show it to some of my friends in the Biological Survey, which is responsible for wild life.

"Well, we got to the road, and there were two policemen. They jumped on us and began to browbeat us. They took the duck and then searched us to see if we had any more.

"We had a rope with us in case one of us had fallen in the ice. The policemen accused us of using it to snare the ducks. We tried to tell them the truth, but they called us 'smart guys' and 'liars.'

Search Car for Ducks.

"In the end, they took us to the Park Police headquarters in the Munitions Building. There, we talked to the officer in charge (Lieut. Henry Helms) and he was very nice. I gave him the name of Mr. Craighead, in the Biological Survey, and after a telephone call to him, were allowed to go.

"Levy, who lives at 334 Adams street northeast, is going to Florida this morning. Meantime, he is hoping that something will be done for the ducks in the Potomac.

"By the way," he was asked, "what became of that duck you had?"

"The cops had it the last I knew," he said. "Maybe you had better check on it."

President Puts Pan-American Parley to Fore

Letter to Latin Republics Broaches Subject of Peace Talks.

President Roosevelt revealed yesterday he had written a letter to the heads of all South American and Central American governments on the subject of a new Pan-American conference.

The conference presumably will be for the purpose of discussing peace in the Western hemisphere. Because of the possibility that the letters in some instances had not yet been delivered, the President declined to discuss its contents. The letter, however, is expected to be made public today.

The President's guarded statement, made at his press conference, did not indicate whether the letter constituted an invitation or whether the subject was merely broached. He did indicate, however, that Canada was not included in his plans.

The President's announcement was the first official confirmation of reports that have been circulated for several days that such a conference was being discussed. There was no intimation as to where the meeting would be held. It was considered probable, however, that it would be held in Washington.

Conference Date Timely.

The Administration has been giving close attention to maintenance of friendly relations and broadening of trade among the American countries. Secretary Roper has been particularly active in the encouragement of trade.

The conference would come at a time when affairs outside the Americas are disturbed and when the United States is giving serious consideration to a permanent neutrality policy. The Monroe Doctrine would undoubtedly play a part in any such conference. The suggestion has been made that the doctrine become multi-lateral, a one-for-all and all-for-one policy of "hands off America."

In reporting the Administration neutrality bill recently the House Foreign Affairs Committee added an amendment to provide that restrictions in exports and financing would not apply to an American republic at war with any nation not an American republic. This, in effect, would write the Monroe Doctrine into statutory law.

In his message to Congress, President Roosevelt stressed the peaceful situation existing in the Americas.

He said:

"Among the nations of the great Western Hemisphere the policy of

Borah Denies His Wife's Story Women Thugs Assailed Him

Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, who has a large following among women, encountered two last week who tried to rob him.

Borah, known as the Lion of the Rockies, has the best voice in the Senate, but he didn't use it that night. He emitted a piercing whistle that could be heard over Rock Creek Valley, and the Amazons fled.

Like most historical events, this one is hard to impale on the spike of absolute verity. Borah, now a candidate for the Republican nomination for President, called the story "absurd." But Mrs. Borah, in their apartment at 2101 Connecticut avenue northwest allowed it to pass.

"I suppose they were autograph hunters," she laughed. "It was a very small thing."

"Yes, but it concerns a very big man," Mrs. Borah was told.

"Oh, I suppose they were hungry," she said.

Then, because it would "be too bad to spoil such a beautiful, sensational story," the wife of the Idahoan agreed that her version of the attempted robbery, as given to the Associated Press, was correct.

This version follows:

"The Senator was strolling up and down in front of the house, when he saw two women hesitating, as though they were bewildered in direction.

"He just thought they were going to ask directions when they stopped. Instead they really were bandits. One pinioned his arms. The other tried to go through his pockets. But he had on a heavy overcoat and was carrying a cane. He struck out with his cane and whistled shrilly, and frightened them away.

"It happened right between the corner of our house and the Kalorama Road corner, on busy Connecticut avenue. But it was one of those bitter nights, and not many people were at large."

At the Capitol, Senator Borah went right on denying the story.

"There's nothing to it," he said. "Mrs. Borah is perpetrating a joke. I'm the only person who knows, and I say there isn't anything to it."

Bill to Permit Red Teaching To Be Pushed

Change in Rider Would Allow Instruction on Communistic Facts.

Mrs. Norton to Call Up Proposal; Sisson and Blanton in Clash.

By James D. Secrest.

A Congressional move to bring to the House a bill to amend the anti-Red rider to the District appropriations act so as to permit the teaching, not the advocacy, of communism and facts regarding Soviet Russia got under way yesterday as an aftermath to the "Battle of the Session."

The challenger, Representative Sisson (Democrat), of New York, is the author of the bill which Chairman Mary T. Norton, of the House District Committee, said she would call up before the committee at its next meeting and ask for an immediate report.

"I think this matter should be brought out in the open on the floor of the House," she said. "I'm for the Sisson bill, as I think the anti-Red rider has already done a great deal of harm to both teachers and pupils in the Washington schools."

Mrs. Norton said she saw no necessity for a public hearing before a sub-committee, as all the facts have been widely publicized, and she stated that the bill should be acted on by the whole committee in time for the next District day, February 24. There will be no committee meeting today.

Good Humor Maintained.

The heralded verbal encounter between Sisson and Representative Blanton (Democrat), of Texas, champion and self-styled author of the anti-Red rider, put the House in a rare good humor despite an exchange of angry words between Blanton and Representative Zioncheck (Democrat), of Washington.

Members of the House and press gathered early, but only a handful of spectators was in the visitors' galleries for the "Battle of the Session."

Only the unwilling judge and referee, Speaker Byrns and Majority Leader Bankhead, respectively, scowled as the House roared with laughter over the definition of "asinine."

The House parliamentarian was forced to resort to the dictionary before he could advise Speaker Byrns whether the use of "asinine" by Blanton could be interpreted as assailing the character of Zioncheck. After some deliberation the Speaker held that it could not and overruled Zioncheck's point of order.

Withdraws Remark.

Previously, Blanton agreed to withdraw the remark that Zioncheck was "doped" because he asserted he had not heard the anti-Red rider read last year though he was on the floor when the conference report on the District bill was called up by Chairman Cannon (Democrat), Missouri.

The House was hilarious as Blanton and Zioncheck bickered over the manner in which the rider was adopted.

"Why, I never heard the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Blanton, talk in such a muffled tone as he did when he advised Mr. Cannon about the amendment," Zioncheck said.

"I was on the floor at the time with about 50 members, and I didn't hear the clerk read the amendment. If I had, I certainly would not have raised a point of order."

When Blanton retorted that Zioncheck's accusation was "asinine and ridiculous," the Washington member asked that the Texan's words be taken down. As Blanton continued to argue, Zioncheck yelled, "sit down, sit down."

And Blanton sat down, but as Majority Leader Bankhead stepped over to whisper to him Blanton

Freeman, Simon Accept Bids To City Health Mass Meeting

Board of Trade Directors Indorse Medical Society's Movement to Obtain Better Sanitary Conditions; Congress Petitioned by Nurses.

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, and Dr. Abram Simon, of the Washington Hebrew Congregation, have accepted invitations to participate in the citizens' public health mass meeting which will be held Sunday afternoon in Central High School auditorium, the District Medical Society announced yesterday.

Bishop Freeman, while prevented from attending, will serve as honorary chairman of the discussion and will compose a message to be read at the assembly. Dr. Simon will preside. An explanatory statement will be delivered by Dr. Sterling Ruffin, president of the medical group sponsoring the meeting.

Full support by the Board of Trade of present efforts to obtain adequate health appropriations for the District was assured yesterday when directors indorsed the medical society's action and voted to have a delegation at the mass meeting.

John Saul, president of the board, was among the civic leaders summoned by Dr. Ruffin last week to weigh the feasibility of calling an assembly of citizens. He is a member of the committee on program and resolutions, announced yesterday, which includes the following:

Dr. Prentiss Willson, chairman; Mrs. Lloyd Biddle, president of the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. L. B. Castell, president of the D. C. Parent-Teacher Association; James E. Colliflower, president of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association; the Rev. Dr. W. L. Darby, executive secretary, Washington Federation of Churches.

Also Mrs. Ernest R. Grant, executive secretary, District Tuberculosis Association; Dr. William H. Hough, chairman, public health committee of the District Medical Society; John Locher, president, Central Labor Union; Thomas E. Lodge, president, Federation of Citizens Associations; and the Right Rev. John O'Grady, director, Catholic Charities of the District.

New emphasis upon the Capital's health-funds emergency was furnished yesterday by the Instructive Visiting Nurse Society, when its board of directors voted unanimously to petition Congress to restore items affecting the Health Department and Board of Public Welfare, which were eliminated by the Budget Bureau.

Copies of the petition were sent to Chairmen Thomas and Blanton, of the Senate and House sub-committees, respectively, on District appropriations.

Roosevelt Announces 3-Way Program to Cut Federal Expenditures

Utopia Unlimited

Communities Planned to Relieve Residents of 'Stranded Towns' Are 'Stranded' Too.

By Felix Bruner

Copyright, 1936, by The Washington Post.

Following is the third of a series of four articles concerning the Resettlement Administration, its widespread activities, its methods of operation, its financial resources and its objectives:

A new group of "stranded communities" has grown up under the New Deal. In the early days of Utopian planning much was heard of "stranded communities." They were towns or villages where the inhabitants no longer had adequate means of supporting themselves. They were to be rescued through the establishment of subsistence homesteads.

Now the subsistence homesteads have become themselves "stranded communities." The reason is the same as that applied to the original stranded towns. There are no adequate means of support.

The most famous of all these projects, 20 in number, is the one at Reedsville, W. Va. That is the community built in a hurry, where the mail order houses failed to fit the foundations and where the total cost became so high that there is no possibility of the Government ever recovering its investment.

Switch from Industrial to Farming.

In Reedsville, as in most of the subsistence homesteads, the plans for the residents to make a living from industries moving into the community have failed to materialize, for the reason that the industries failed to show up. At Reedsville, and in many of the other homestead communities, there is not enough land for the residents to support themselves by farming. This situation may now be remedied by Government investment in more land, turning the towns into "rural communities" rather than "subsistence homesteads."

There also is some talk of selling the houses to the families occupying them, with the privilege of paying for them in perhaps 40 years. The only hitch in this plan is the fact that in many instances the houses cost as much as twice what they are actually worth and no way has yet been found to write off the difference.

In fairness to Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, resettlement administrator, it must be pointed out that he did not originate the subsistence homestead idea. The homesteads were started under the direction of the In-

Lincoln Praise Voiced by Ickes, Gov. Talmadge

Georgian Assails the Brain Trust and Secretary Upholds Roosevelt.

By the Associated Press.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 11.—Highly contrasting references to President Roosevelt marked the tributes tonight of two political foemen—Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia and Secretary of Interior Harold I. Ickes—to Abraham Lincoln on the eve of the Emancipator's 127th birthday anniversary.

Speaking from the same platform, the Southern Governor, cited as the first from his section to deliver a Lincoln eulogium in this city, long his home, and the Roosevelt Cabinet member joined in acknowledging the great services to his Nation of the first Republican President.

But the Georgian, an outspoken critic of the New Deal who has engaged in bitter controversies with Ickes, hit at the present Administration in his one direct comparison between it and Lincoln's.

Speaking first at the Mid-day Luncheon Club's annual commemoration of Springfield's most distinguished citizen, Talmadge said:

"Would that we had a man like Abraham Lincoln in the White House today. If we did, he would never allow a brain trusters' creed to teach the doctrine that you can boondoggle yourself back to prosperity."

Draws Analogy.

Later the Cabinet member from Chicago in a speech devoted almost entirely to an analogy between President Roosevelt's trials and those of the Civil War executive, discussed the Constitutional issue and drew a close parallel between them.

"Certainly Lincoln did not regard the Constitution as an infallible and immutable instrument," he said. "He went into the 1860 campaign with his mind firmly made up that, the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding, something must be done about the institution of human slavery.

"Undoubtedly his mind was fixed on his objective and that objective

Farm Bill Vote Again Delayed By Senate Bloc

3-Day Setback Is Assured; 500-Million Spending Limit Is Fixed.

By Robert C. Albright.

Powerless to halt ultimate farm bill passage, compact Senate minority opposition yesterday forced another three-day delay on the final vote, while majority forces wrote a $500,000,000 spending limitation into the measure to palliate criticism.

Despite AAA insistence that passage by February 15 is essential if cotton farmers are to be brought completely under its benefits, the Senate agreed yesterday not to vote on the bill before Friday, at the earliest. The House probably will not call the measure up before next week.

Agreement to drastically limit Senate farm bill debate, beginning Friday, followed a running attack on the measure yesterday by minority critics, and stalwart defense by Administration leaders.

A dozen amendments to curtail its scope and clarify the broad powers it confers on the Secretary of Agriculture, and one complete Republican substitute for the Administration bill, meanwhile were dropped into the Senate hopper.

Debate to be Limited.

As the Senate recessed, Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson told members he "hopes to get a vote by Friday." His unanimous consent agreement on that day will limit members to 15 minutes each on the bill, and 10 minutes additional on every amendment.

Senate Minority Leader Charles L. McNary, who denounced the AAA substitute as a "fraud and a sham" perpetrated in the name of soil conservation, served notice that he will move to send the bill back to the Agriculture Committee for public hearings. Democratic leaders predicted he will fail by a broad margin of votes.

Only one amendment moved to a vote yesterday. Offered by Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, it definitely restricted Secretary Wallace to $500,000,000 in

'Coin' Harvey Is Dead at 85; Nominee for President in 1932

By the Associated Press.

Monte Ne, Ark., Feb. 11.—William Hope "Coin" Harvey, 85, veteran champion of bi-metallism and one-time Presidential candidate, died at his home here tonight.

Harvey was stricken with peritonitis following an attack of intestinal influenza. He passed into a semi-coma late today and death followed swiftly. With him at the time of his death was his second wife, Mrs. Ellston Leake Harvey, to whom he was married seven years ago and who was his private secretary for more than 30 years.

His three children, Tom Harvey, of Huntington, W. Va.; Mrs. Hammond Halliday, and Miss Annette Harvey, New York City, were notified late today of their father's critical condition.

Born at Buffalo, W. Va., August 16, 1851, Harvey was the son of Col. Robert and Anna M. Hope Harvey. He was educated at Buffalo Academy and Marshall College, West Virginia.

He practiced law from 1871 to 1874 and married Anna R. Halliday, of Delaware, Ohio, in 1876. They were divorced in 1929.

Harvey, writer on money and economics, was the Presidential candidate of the Liberty Party in 1932 after he had been in retirement for years.

He was best known to an older generation for his "free silver" campaign with the late William Jennings Bryan in 1896.

Harvey claimed two outstanding successes in his life although it was his heroic "failures" that made him nationally famous.

He built, with contributions from citizens, the Mineral Palace at Pueblo, Colo., in 1889 to house exhibits of the mineral resources of that State. An heroic statue of "King Coal" in the palace was cut by a Chicago sculptor from a solid piece of coal weighing 11,000 pounds.

Harvey also started the Ozark trails at Monte Ne.

Administration Expected to Reveal New Fiscal Plan Next Week.

Senate to Debate Byrd Resolution

Aid Funds to Be Shifted to Slash 1936-37 Relief Appropriation.

A triple attack upon Government expenditures is under way and announcement of the Administration's fiscal plans can be expected within a week, President Roosevelt said yesterday.

Almost daily conferences are being held at the White House leading up to the President's request of Congress for further appropriations for relief. Most of the changes in the financial set-up are expected to involve cancellation of authorizations for borrowing and a shifting of relief funds.

The President indicated that the attack will take these forms:

1. Cancellation of authorizations to Federal bureaus. This is money that the bureaus were authorized to borrow and dispense in excess of the amounts needed.

2. Cutting of various appropriations and authoriztaions which would effect a reduction in the public debt.

3. Consideration of appropriations which will have an effect upon the budget or the current deficit.

Byrd Resolution Approved.

Meanwhile, the Senate Rules Committee gave unanimous approval to the resolution introduced by Senator Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, designed to cut Federal costs by abolishing some bureaus and consolidating others. The resolution will be formally reported to the Senate.

The proposal calls for a committee of three Democrats and two Republicans to study the Government organization and to make recommendations.

President Roosevelt already has indicated in connection with the first proposal in his three-point program that authorizations to lending agencies will be cut by more than $1,000,000. The biggest cut will come in the authorization to the Home Owners Loan Corporation to borrow money.

Mr. Roosevelt declined to go into details as to the other points in his program other than to say that no specific amount that must be trimmed from Government expenditures has been agreed upon. He denied a report that his fiscal program would be delayed until the amount collected in the March 15 income tax installment is known.

Much attention is being given to switching of relief funds in an endeavor to bring down the amount that Congress must appropriate for this purpose. It has been estimated that the amount may reach $2,000,000, but the President is believed to be determined to cut the figure as much as possible.

Funds for operation of the Works Progress Administration, the organization that is bearing the principal burden of relief, will be exhausted by about May 1. At the present time, reports show that 3,600,000 persons are at work under the relief program. About 2,900,000 are under WPA. The CCC still has about 400,000 men, and the remainder are divided among various agencies.

New Taxes Studied.

Because of the fact that only a comparative handful of people are employed by agencies other than the WPA and the CCC, it is expected that drastic cuts will be made in appropriations for these agencies and the money turned over to the WPA. Money probably will be taken from such agencies as Resettlement, Rural Electrification, the Bureau of Public Roads, and possibly the Army and Navy, which have been given large allotments from WPA funds. This will mean a complete change in the relief picture with strong emphasis on "made" work.

Meanwhile, officials continued to struggle with new tax legislation. It was still being reported that only $500,000,000 in taxes would be sought this year.

Representative Adolph Sabath (Democrat), Illinois, after a White House conference, said that the President was eager to avoid higher taxes now and insistent that Congress limit future appropriations to necessary expenditures. Sabath attended the White House conference with members of the House Democratic Steering Committee, of which he is the head. He said the committee had told Mr. Roosevelt it would do everything possible toward expediting the Administration program and working toward an early adjournment.

Leaders Score Attack on WPA By Gen. Hagood

Reference by Officer to 'Stage Money' Not Good Order, Says Byrns.

By the Associated Press.

An Army general's reference to WPA funds as "stage money"—"you pass it around but you can't get anything out of it in the end"—yesterday brought criticism and a threat of retaliation from four Congressional Democrats.

Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood, commander of the Eighth Corps Area and Third Field Army, a native of South Carolina, made his statement during a House Appropriations subcommittee hearing on the Army supply bill.

One House member asserted his remarks bordered on "contempt of the Administration."

Byrns' Statement.

Chairman Rogers (Democrat), New Hampshire, of the Military Affairs sub-committee which has been investigating War Department activities, disclosed his committee probably would give consideration to the Hagood testimony.

"It certainly does not make for good order and discipline," Speaker Byrns told newspapermen. "I think men who show so little regard for their superior should not be retained in high command or in any command, as a matter of fact."

The Hagood incident, moreover, gave signs of creating a rift within the Military Affairs Committee. Whereas Representative Faddis (Democrat), of the committee, was outspoken in denouncing Hagood, Chairman McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina, sail when questioned he would do all he could to defend his fellow South Carolinian—"if he needs defense."

Called "Unfortunate."

"It is unfortunate,' McSwain said, "but these are times of strain, and we all make slips. Gen. Hagood has rendered long and distinguished service, and he and his family have been lifelong Democrats—Jeffersonian Democrats—down in my State many, many years back."

"What Gen. Hagood says," Faddis contended, "strikes at the President, who is the commander in chief, and it makes for poor discipine."

Faddis recalled the incident involving Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, who was court-martialed and then resigned after he had criticized aviation defense systems of the Army and Navy.

"Disrespect" Cited.

"But his statements," Faddis said, "were less reprehensible, because they had a more direct relation to matters of the service."

Representative Lanham (Democrat), Texas, said he wondered if Hagood "realized he was talking against his own organization." There are 41 Army engineers assigned with the WPA, the Texan said.

"Consequently," he said, "he is indicting his own organization."

"It struck me," Representative Martin (Democrat), Colorado, interposed, "that it (Hagood's testimony) borders on disrespect if not contempt of the Administration. I didn't know that officers were permitted to speak in such a disrespectful manner of the Administration."

Both McSwain and Rogers said there had been no demands from "downtown" for steps against the Army officer.

200 Parisian Students Riot Against Professor

Paris, Feb. 11 (AP).—Police routed 200 university students who tried to lock themselves in the law school of the University of Paris tonight. After the two-hour struggle, 80 of the students were arrested.

The students, adopting new tactics, were trying to force the dismissal of Prof. Gaston Jeze, who served as Ethiopia's legal adviser at Geneva. They planned to stay in the building overnight.

The students were dragged out by heavy forces of mobile guards and police besieging the school. There was occasional fighting on the icy streets. Sympathetic to Italy, the students have repeatedly created disorders to prevent Jeze from resuming his lectures.

Hotel Blaze at Peoria Does $50,000 Damage

Peoria, Ill., Feb. 11 (AP).—Fire swept the Seneca Hotel, theatrical hostelry, today, with a loss estimated by firemen at $50,000. A dozen of the 77 guests in the hotel leaped from upper floors into fire nets as the blaze blocked staircases. Several women were carried down ladders. No injuries were reported.

the good neighbor has happily prevailed. At no time in the four and a half centuries of modern civilization in the Americas has there existed a greater spirit of mutual understanding, of common helpfulness and of devotion to the ideals of self-government than there exists today."

Sumner Welles, Assistant Secretary of State, made a similar pronouncement in a recent speech:

"There exists a greater realization on the part of the people of the United States of the value to themselves of a sure political and commercial understanding with the other republics of this hemisphere.

"Our new policy of the 'good neighbor' has been predicated upon the belief of this Government that there should exist an inter-American relationship based on a recognition of actual and not theoretical equality between the American republics; on a complete forbearance from interference of any one republic in the domestic concerns of any other; on economic cooperation, and finally on the common realization that in the world at large all of the American republics confront the same international problems and that in their relations with non-American powers the welfare and security of any one of them can not be a matter of indifference to the others."

In 1933 at the Pan-American conference at Montevideo a treaty was agreed upon renouncing war as an instrument of national policy and pledging nonrecognition of territory seized by aggression. The plan was recently ratified by the United States. Some of the other nations have not yet ratified it.

Lincoln Feared Union Couldn't Stand Strain, But It Did—and Will Again.

By Franklyn Waltman

SPEAKING from the White House portico November 10, 1864, a few days after his re-election to the Presidency, Abraham Lincoln said:

"It has long been a grave question whether any government not too strong for the liberties of its people can be strong enough to maintain its own existence in great emergencies."

Photostatic copies of the original manuscript of this speech by "Honest Abe" were distributed by WPA as a souvenir of Lincoln's Birthday this year. WPA explained it was a "long-lost manuscript" found by one of its staff while seeking data for the monumental "American Guide," which that agency is preparing to give work to jobless white-collar workers.

This explanation is not quite accurate, since the WPA announcement makes it clear that the manuscript was never lost. It was fished out of a bank vault in Dryden, N. Y., where its owner, a public library, had deposited it. But that is inconsequential. What is important is the food for thought in the opening paragraph of that speech, already quoted.

* * * *

When Mr. Lincoln uttered that thought, the Civil War was still in progress. He was physically tired and mentally wearied. No doubt, he wondered in his heart whether the Federal Union would stand the strain of that terrific conflict. But it did, and therein lies the thought.

Similar thoughts have been expressed during the current depression, chiefly by New Dealers. In his Atlanta speech, President Roosevelt suggested that the mechanics of civilization had come to a stop on the eve of his inauguration. Most of the argument over the Constitution now raging is based on the premise that that document is not adequate to maintain this country—that it holds us back to a horse and buggy age.

But just as the crisis of the Civil War, which created doubts in the mind of Lincoln, passed, so will the current emergency, without substantial change in the fundamentals of our government. Historians of the future may look back and conclude that the American people—like the British—have made the democratic form of government workable, for they have the good sense to tolerate disguised dictatorships in time of stress, but once the emergency has passed, they demand a return to democratic processes.

* * * *

It is the turn of the Republicans to become theatrical today. The Democrats had their innings last month, when, led by President Roosevelt, the statesmen of that party drew around them the mantle of Andrew Jackson. Herbert Hoover and a great variety of Republicans now will don the simple black garb of the Great Emancipator and undertake to speak with his voice. On Washington's Birthday, everyone will be able to play the part of the Father of Our Country.

* * * *

Many Republicans are taking satisfaction from the increased activity against New Deal measures being displayed by their party floor leader in the Senate, Charles L. McNary. After sitting quietly through more than two years of the New Deal, giving hardly more than passive resistance to the Democratic platform, Senator McNary has sprung into action and intelligently and vigorously challenged the pending farm relief substitute for AAA.

* * * *

The Treasury reports a sizable increase in the issuance of large denomination currency, particularly $10,000, $5,000 and $1,000 bills. There are outstanding $14,400,000 of $10,000 bills. At the end of November, the total was slightly larger. A year ago, there were outstanding $10,000,000 of $10,000 notes, while at the peak of hoarding in the 1933 bank crisis, the total was, in round figures, $12,000,000.

The reason for the demand for $10,000 notes is not fully clear. Calls for paper currency of large denomination in the past has been an indication that hoarding was taking place, but this is generally discounted at this time. With Federal guarantee of bank deposits, there is no reason for hoarding.

A suggestion came from New York that the large bills were shipped abroad in October and November when political uncertainties in those countries had a depressing effect on exchanges, with a distrust of national currencies.

A Treasury explanation is that perhaps many banks are holding vault cash in the large bills, due to the large amount of idle money in the banking system and the lack of any need to keep in a state of liquidity through smaller bills.

* * * *

Whatever the reason, it would be fun just to have a $10,000 bill to carry around for a few days, wouldn't it?

* * * *

Were it not for the fact that, barring unforseen developments, there will be no vacancies on the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve system for several years, the tendency of that body to establish a lame duck system might be disturbing. Three of the four members of the board dropped by President Roosevelt in reorganizing that agency have been given posts under the new board.

Indeed, aside from the permanency that might be involved, J. J. Thomas, vice chairman of the old board, has landed in a better job. He has been named chairman of the board of directors of the Kansas City Reserve Bank at $20,000 annualy. His old salary was $12,500.

Farm Bill Vote Delayed

drafts he may make on the Treasury for payments to farmers. It was approved by a voice vote.

McNary repeatedly tangled with Byrnes, trying to force an admission from the Democratic Senator that proposed tax legislation will inextricably be tied into the new farm program. Byrnes insisted that was a matter for the Finance Committee to determine.

Senator Daniel O. Hastings (Republican), Delaware, in a speech which drew a warm reply from Sentor Robinson, asserted the primary purpose of the measure is "to control the farmers themselves and to give jobs to the thousands of Democrats who were employed under AAA."

He declared the bill is designed to circumvent the Supreme Court's AAA decision, and is not primarily designed for direct and immediate benefit to the farmers.

Senator Robinson broke into the debate to read a section of the Republican 1932 platform advocating "control of production" to balance supply and demand of farm products, and said the Administration, through AAA, had only carried out a plank of the Republican platform.

"I don't know what those who wrote that provision had in mind," said Hastings, "but the Senator will not find anything in that platform that advocates doing something that the Supreme Court has declared unconstitutional," Hastings retorted.

Reading from the Supreme Court's AAA ruling, Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, declared the same arguments would apply to the regulations Wallace is empowered to draft under the AAA substitute.

"Clearly, we are attempting to do something the Supreme Court said we couldn't do," Borah said.

A lengthy speech in defense of the court was delivered by Senator William H. King (Democrat), Utah, who assailed the Administration's bill as "unsound and unconstitutional."

He said he is opposed to the bill and will not vote for it.

The alternative Republican bill, proposing embargoes, higher tariffs and limiting payments to States for soil conservation, was offered by Senator McNary, "by request." McNary pointed out that it set forth many of the objectives of George N. Peek, former foreign trade adviser to the President.

Under this proposed measure, Federal farm aid to the States for any year would "not exceed the amount of taxes payable for such year with respect to lands planted to soil-improving crops, together with the cost of seed."

Out of AAA, the bill would salvage the 30 per cent of customs receipts set aside, and use this to make payments to farmers "based on normal production of basic export commodities equalling the national production."

Amendments to the Administration's farm plan pushed yesterday included proposals by:

Dickinson (Republican), Iowa—To estimate the two-year stop-gap Federal erosion plan, by striking out section 8 of the bill and to place Federal grants to States under the permanent (State-aid) plan on a "matching" basis, with the States meeting Federal allotments dollar for dollar.

Wagner (Democrat), New York—To protect consumers' interests by establishing as rapidly as possible a normal ratio between purchasing power of farm income and income of persons not on farms, using the 1909 to 1914 period as a base.

By Byrnes—To clarify provisions of the bill making the Secretary of Agriculture the judge of facts, but permitting the Comptroller-General to judge the law in auditing the new farm set-up's accounts.

By McNary—To prevent lands taken out of production for soil-conservation purposes to be used for grazing dairy cows or other livestock.

Meanwhile, the President signed the deficiency bill carrying $296,185,000 to pay farmers who at least partially complied with 1933 AAA contracts, and administrative machinery was set in motion to complete 1935 payments suddenly checked when AAA was ruled off the books.

New U. S. Unit To Aid Housing Held Vital Need

Building Trades of A. F. L. and Labor Conference Agree on Program.

Broad lines of a national housing program were agreed upon by representatives of the building trades unions of the Building Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, and the Labor Housing Conference, at a meeting in Hamilton Hotel yesterday.

Declaring that the immediate housing need is for a clear-cut legislative program, which would include a permanent Federal housing agency with responsibility and means to carry through a long-term program of low-rental housing, a plan supported by both agencies was agreed upon.

Arrangements were made for discussion with Senator Wagner, Representative Ellenbogen and members of the Administration presumably interested in housing, and plans for a larger conference in the near future were advanced. Practically every faction in the building trades was represented, indicating, according to observers, that labor is taking a vital interest in the housing situation, and is prepared to support a low-cost subsidized housing program.

Far From Former Goal

The statement said that "despite all rosy talk of a building boom," figures from the Bureau of Labor Statistics show that the United States has not attained one-fifth of the average level of residential production of the 1920's. Since 1932, about one-third of the building trades workers have been unemployed, and, the statement says, "even the Federal Housing Administration, in spite of all its ballyhoo about low-cost housing, has only stimulated a small amount of actual construction, and all this has reached only the upper income groups."

A four-point program was included in the statement, which insisted that the first necessity is a permanent Federal housing agency, drawing together all existing housing agencies and removing it from the "emergency" status under which most of them now exist.

"Emergency agencies cannot remove the local distrust and suspicion engendered by overnight changes in Federal policy and lack of a certain future program," the statement said.

Subsidies Are Required.

The second point was the need for a "clear-cut system of Federal subsidies" to provide for housing persons with incomes under $1,200, who cannot be housed without some form of outright grant or subsidy." The statement said the only agency able to supply such grants is the Federal Government, and insisted it should do so "as a part of a long-term program."

The third point was the need for "local initiative, co-operation and responsibility in housing construction and management," but this, the statement said, could only come when the Federal housing agency is empowered to construct "demonstration projects where there is proved need for housing and local authorities are unable or unwilling to act."

In return for such Federal aid and subsidies, the statement pointed out, the Federal agency must "exact adequate standards in all publicly assisted housing projects." All projects must meet definite standards of physical space, neighborhood planning, and facilities. A suggestion that in order to meet these standards, public-aided projects should be large in size and managed by public or semi-public agencies, was included in the statement.

Labor Ready to Help.

"Labor," the statement said, "has stood consistently for a living wage for the workers of America, but the housing problem is so grave that the situation cannot await for the arrival of a universal living wage. Hence the need for an adequate Federal housing program. Labor stands ready to co-operate in such a program, with the understanding that low-rent housing will not be used to destroy a wage structure, which has been painfully built up over a period of 50 years."

Representatives of more than a dozen labor unions attended the meeting. The statement was prepared by Catherine Bauer, of the Labor Housing Conference. Miss Bauer said that undoubtedly the statement would form the basis for a unified drive for effective housing measures by at least 60 local labor housing committees affiliated with the Labor Housing Conference, and by labor organizations throughout the country.

594 Employes Added To Handle Bonus Work

By the Associated Press.

Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, veterans' administrator, announced yesterday appointment of 594 additional employes to handle work in paying the bonus to the World War veterans in $50 bonds and checks for balances.

Hines said eventually more than 2,000 more employes would be appointed, approximately 1,100 for offices throughout the country and 900 for the central office here. All are drawn from civil service.

Curtis Buried; Thousands Pay Last Tributes

Ex-Vice President to Rest Beside Wife; Honored by Indians.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., Feb. 11.—An Indian bow and arrows, crossed on his casket, and the floral tributes of President Roosevelt and former President Hoover reviewed strikingly today the career of Charles Curtis at the former Vice President's impressive funeral.

Thousands of his friends and constituents during his long years in the United States Senate crowded past his bier in its place of honor in the State Capitol rotunda.

Gov. Alf M. Landon and Senator Arthur Capper led Kansas officialdom in paying unprecedented State honors to a distinguished native son who died a private citizen in Washington Saturday.

They heard him eulogized, during the services in the House of Representatives Hall, as an "unaffected American," a man who led a life of simplicity, who remained plain "Charley Curtis" to Kansans from his humble start as jockey and hack driver until even after his death.

The bow and arrows were the gift of Chief Deerfoot, of the Apache Tribe. They symbolized an Indian burial custom of preparing a warrior for the "happy hunting ground." Curtis was a blood member of the Kaw Tribe of Indians, although he was predominantly white, and lived on their reservation when a boy.

"Millions of admiring associates, devoted friends and reverent commoners throughout these United States join this hour," said Dr. Harold C. Case in his funeral sermon, "with grief-stricken loved ones in an affectionate tribute to a great man in a high occasion of faith in God and in a sincere prayer of gratitude for Charles Curtis."

Burial was in Topeka cemetery beside the body of Mrs. Curtis, who died several years ago.

1,500 Brazilians Killed By Strange Disease

Para, Brazil, Feb. 11 (U.P.).—More than 1,500 persons are dead as result of an undiagnosed disease epidemic sweeping the settlements around the confluence of the Tapajoz and Amazon Rivers, near Santa Rem, according to unconfirmed private reports tonight.

Virginia Span Bids Asked.

Richmond, Feb. 11 (AP).—The State highway department today advertised for bids for the rebuilding of the Bruce Bridge over the Pamunkey River at West Point, of which about 500 feet was carried away as the result of ice jams. Bids are returnable by February 25. The bridge is 2,252 feet long.

2 of Train Crew Killed As Steam Forces Leap

Moncks Corner, S. C., Feb. 11 (AP).—The engineer and fireman of the Atlantic Coast Line's southbound Florida Special were killed 10 miles north of here today when a broken side rod punctured the engine boiler, filling the cab with steam and forcing them to jump.

C. B. Rutledge, about 60, of Florence, the engineer, set the brakes before leaping, and the train ground to a stop a few hundred yards down the track.

2 Die, Girl Is Rescued As Flames Raze Hotel

Pittsburgh, Feb. 11 (AP).—Two men died, firemen rescued a 24-year-old girl clinging to a third-floor ledge and three others leaped to safety today as flames destroyed the Gross Hotel in nearby Clairton.

Fifty-five-year-old Mike Pappas burned to death and Mike Glimias, 50, apparently died from suffocation. Both were roomers in the hotel.

Near-Zero Cold To Strike Here At Dawn Today

Fatalities From Pneumonia Reported on Increase; No 'Break' Forecast.

The prolonged cold wave continued to dominate most of the Nation yesterday. Little prospect of relief is seen in what has been, in many places, the most extended period of bitter weather in the histories of their weather bureaus.

Piercing cold held full sway from the Continental Divide to the Atlantic Coast, with Washington shivering in a maximum temperature at 25 at 3:50 p. m.

Before dawn today the mercury will go down to 8, the Weather Bureau predicted last night. Cloudiness and a rise in temperature will bring snow late tomorrow, it was forecast.

Villages Isolated.

Principal interest in the West yesterday centered around the efforts of 20 men to penetrate the snowbound villages of Marcus and Herford in South Dakota's Black Hills.

The rescue party finally reached marshes where two truckloads of food were delivered.

A new menace—disease—joined winter's cavalcade of ice and snow, suffering and death, yesterday.

Warnings that pneumonia was on the increase were issued by health officials at Chicago.

Warnings Are Issued.

Authorities at the Health Department here, however, said that while pneumonia is increasing, with proper care, there is little cause for alarm. The increase is seasonal, they explained. However, they warned citizens to pamper the slightest colds and run no risks by exposing themselves to colds, grip and throat and sinus infection.

"There has been quite a bit of pneumonia, with the number of fatalities on the increase," officials said.

"People should be particularly careful at this time of year."

No prospect for a "break" in the three-weeks' cold wave was forecast by the Weather Bureau last night. Yesterday's minimum was 9 at 7 a. m.

Pedestrians Bruised.

There were no major traffic accidents yesterday. Here and there pedestrians fell and bruised themselves, but none of their injuries was regarded serious enough to warrant hospital treatment.

The West reported many sub-zero readings.

From Prarie de Chien, Wis., the Associated Press reported a new tale of heroism.

John Murphy, 18, was stricken with a critical throat infection at a CCC camp 18 miles from town. Capt. Robert Wilson, camp physician, operated, placed the youth in an ambulance and held the hole in the patient's windpipe so that he could breathe while 40 comrades cleared a path through the snow barriers.

Families Doubling Up.

In some South Dakota spots families doubled-up to conserve coal. Fuel shortage remained acute in some places in Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin.

Fuel shortages spread into the deep South where residents were unused to combat cold and lack of heating facilities already had contributed to suffering.

On the Mississippi Gulf Coast, seven towns counting 55,000 population virtually were without coal supplies. Woodcutters were hard at work inland, but fuel was insufficient to meet demands.

Alabama coal mines were working at top speed, but even augmented crews could not bring enough fuel above ground to keep up with growing pressure from dealers.

Georgia Hard Hit.

In Georgia many homes were without fuel. Atlanta dealers reported they had less than a week's supply on hand. A shipment of coal was expected at Moultrie, Ga., near the Florida line, but the situation there was acute. Franklin, Ga., reported all coal exhausted and wood was being burned. Waycross, Toccoa and other Georgia cities reported acute shortages.

Meanwhile, floods which took eight lives in the deep South last week gradually were abating. Richmond, Va., however, still faced a flood threat from a huge ice jam in the James River.

Increasing fears were felt for nine Government workers marooned on a houseboat in the Ohio River near Paducah, Ky. A rising river threatened to force the ice gorge, which has locked the boat, against the craft. If this occurs, the men will have to flee to Hurricane Island, where there is no shelter.

The men reported to observers who flew over the boat Tuesday they were badly in need of food and medicine. They planned to butcher the one hog on the island tomorrow and asked salt with which to cure it.

Some of the sub-zero readings yesterday were 32 below in Devil's Minn.; 28 below in Bemidji, Minn.; 7 below in Omaha; 10 below in Peoria, and 2 below in Canton, N. Y.

Cutter Is Crippled.

One of the 75-foot Coast Guard cutters steaming to the aid of a disabled barge burned out a clutch in the thick Delaware Bay ice near Cape May, N. J.

The crippled cutter, the 218, was reported in danger from crushing ice. The other cutter, the 226, continued toward the barge. The 150-foot cutter Champlain was ordered by wireless to help the distressed ships.

Meanwhile, Boy Scout executives appealed to more than 1,000,000 youngsters to distribute feed for birds, whose lives were endangered by their inability to feed in snow and ice.

Chesapeake Ice Worse.

By the Associated Press.

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 11.—Ice conditions in the Chesapeake were reported as "worse" today in warnings sent broadcast to shipping by the Naval radio station for the hydrographic office. The warnings were repeated hourly for 24 hours, and read:

"Ice in upper Chesapeake Bay increasing. Heavy pack ice reported Cove Point to Wolf Trap. Main Channel, Sandy Point to Baltimore navigable only with assistance of ice breakers during daylight only. Thimble Shoal Channel and Hampton Roads free of heavy ice. "Following this message was sent another, telling ship masters how to get their vessels through the ice fields.

The cutter Mohawk went to the assistance of the Merchants and Miners steamer Essex, which had sustained a broken rudder off Cove Point, while trying to cut her way through.

The Mohawk had about exhausted her fresh water supply. She stood off from the Essex after responding to the latter vessel's call for assistance. The Essex upplied the cutter with water and the Mohawk in turn took the diabled steamer in tow.

The steamer Robin Adair, 4,267 tons, was having trouble finding her way through the ice and is believed to have anchored to await an ice breaker.

The American steamer Mobile City, operating between Norfolk and Baltimore and West Coast ports, and the coal carrier Walter D. Noyes were in the bay awaiting an ice beaker or he cutter Mohawk. The cutter Seneca, which arrived here on her way to Baltimore to be laid up, was put into service as an ice breaker today.

Nicaraguans Riot After Strike Death

Managua, Nicaragua, Feb. 11 (U.P.).—A mob paraded Managua streets tonight, threatening the electric light plant and attempting to set fire to several buildings as an aftermath of the slaying of a striking chauffeur by a British banker.

The National Bank closed its doors as a precaution against looting. Many business houses followed the example.

Gen. Anastacio Somoza, head of the national guard, addressing the strikers assembled in Central Park, appeased them somewhat when he announced that Porfirio Perez, district president, had resigned. Police Chief Domingo Melendez was also expected to submit his resignation.

The chauffeur was shot shortly after a strike was called, when the strikers attempted to attack Charles Wheelock, part owner of a private bank which operates under the Banco Anglo Central.

Spacious Health Laboratory Hampered by Lack of Funds

New Addition at Gallinger Doomed to Be 'White Elephant' Because of Inadequate Staff if Budget Allowance Is Not Increased.

With health items trimmed deeply by the Bureau of the Budget, the 1937 District budget is now receiving Congressional consideration. The Washington Post desires that this city have the best health department in the Nation. This is one of a series of articles designed to show Congress the District's health needs.

By Gerald G. Gross.

Attacking Washington's health problem by typewriter is much like trying to close an overstuffed suitcase. When you push one end down and get it fastened, the other end flies open.

Concentration is similarly difficult when one is examining this city's financial approach to tuberculosis control, laboratory service, school medical inspection and municipal hospitalization. Just when you think you've pinned down a comprehensive discussion of one of them, something else pops up to demand the right of way.

The whole works, actually, is rather "tetched in the haid."

As one medical leader in private practice told me:

"They give us the country's outstanding public health officer (Dr. George C. Ruhland) and then deny him the appropriations necessary to carry out his work decently."

At Gallinger Hospital one finds a splendid laboratory nearing completion but it's doomed to be a "white elephant," purse strings being as tight as they are, because there isn't the operating force to man it.

From the same hospital patients are being discharged daily only to be admitted again in a few days or few weeks (still at taxpayers' expense) because the institution has no social service department to follow up cases that require home attention.

Social Service Lacking.

If you know of a general hospital, public or private, in any American city of comparable size to Washington which has no paid social service department whatever, I'd like to know about it. Gallinger's superintendent, Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, probably would, too.

Parents expect—and justly so—full health protection for their children and yet the number of school medical inspectors, 14, available to look after 93,000 pupils is the same as it was 10 years ago, Dr. Ruhland points out, when attendance was many thousands fewer. Nurses likewise have remained at a stationary figure—12.

A handsome sanitarium for tuberculous children was erected by the District at Glenn Dale, Md. Not yet completed and fully equipped, it is occupied to about one-half its 300-bed capacity. Dedicated to a noble purpose, the sanitarium cannot even hope to achieve maximum efficiency because the number of nurses and attendants allotted is woefully inadequate.

Here, for instance, is what the Budget Bureau disallowed, after the District Commissioners had pared down their estimates to the bone:

Four nurses at $1,500 net, $6,000.

Two nurses at $1,500 net, less two nurses allowed at $1,320 net, a difference of $360. (I don't understand it either).

One head cook, $1,500.

Two junior laborers at $780 net, $1,560.

Four minor domestic attendants (nurses' aids), $3,120.

One fireman, $1,080.

Seven minor domestic attendants, $7,530.

Two minor domestic attendants, $1,560.

Additional for temporary services (Commissioners asked $1,000 in addition to 1936 amount of $1,000; Budget allowed for 1937, $1,080), $940.

Seemingly devoid of rhyme or reason, the public health establishment of the Capital goes on and on like this. Can it be any wonder that our death rate from tuberculosis is second highest in the land, that the death rate from all causes is in the same position?

Small Laboratory Staff.

If there be any cause for wonder, it is that the administration of the District's public health facilities are doing as well as they are with the ludicrously meager funds allotted to them.

It is beyond me how Dr. Bocock can get 109,000 examinations a year—sputum tests, blood counts, tissue examinations, Wassermanns and everything else—out of a tiny laboratory staff consisting of a pathologist director, six technician assistants and a clerk.

I was told yesterday how many tests that is per hour, some unbelievable average, but I forgot what it was.

Dr. H. H. Lemler, whose hobby is photography, is in charge of the laboratory. One moment he is swollen with pride as he reflects on the roomy layout under his command; the next moment he is crestfallen because I inadvertently asked if he had enough help.

"Not half enough," he replied.

His working force should not be required to go into the wards and collect its specimens. But it has to, as do the bacteriologists and assistants in the Health Department who spend a large percentage of their time in the streets, when all of it should be devoted to their cultures and microscopes.

Municipal hospitals and health departments elsewhere, which bear no such crushing burdens as are prevalent here, engage in valuable research as well as routine work. Nothing of the sort is possible here, to the keen regret of administrators, employes and the local medical profession.

Oh, I almost forgot. Lest the inference be drawn that the laboratory addition at Gallinger was made possible by Congressional appropriation, rest assured that this "white elephant" was not born on Capitol Hill. It was built with funds that Dr. Bocock managed to wheedle out of someone with the expectation it would be adequately manned eventually.

If the superintendent weren't such a proficient wheedler, Gallinger would be infinitely worse off than it is.

Airport Closing Up to Congress

will be brought to the House floor. He has requested a special rule of the House Rules Committee and also has threatened to move for suspension of the rules.

McSwain, while excitedly pushing the legislation last week because of the possibility that the airport might be closed next Saturday, appeared strangely calm in contrast yesterday. He said the matter will be taken up in due time.

While Solomon insists that he will go forward with his threat to remove traffic guards on Saturday, McSwain expressed the belief the Department of Commerce could be persuaded to stay its order for closing the airport simultaneously if such action proves necessary.

Site Compromise Sought.

Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, and Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, met yesterday morning for a few minutes to arrange for the resumption of conferences on the Senate and House bills to set up a commission for the selection of a permanent airport site.

They parted with the understanding that Nichols would submit within a few days the draft of a compromise plan which the conferees may use as a basis for an agreement.

Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, one of the House conferees, meanwhile expressed dissatisfaction with both of the major sites, Washington Airport and Gravelly Point, and asserted that the commission should be composed of entirely nonpartisan members.

The Senate bill leaves the appointments to the President, while the House bill designates the agencies that must be represented on the commission.

"It's time we are getting away from this fight over the two major sites," Dirksen said. "With the advances that are being made in the speed and the size of aircraft, it seems to me that Gravelly Point is out of the question and that even Washington Airport is too close to Bolling Field and the Naval Air Station."

Death Mystery Enters Statler Suit on Will

Doctor Again Testifies to Bruises Discovered on Young Heiress.

By the Associated Press.

Carthage, N. C., Feb. 11.—Mrs. Elva Statler Davidson's mysterious death was drawn into the litigation over her will today as witnesses were called for the foster relatives contesting it.

Over the protest of attorneys for H. Bradley Davidson, jr., her husband and the principal beneficiary under the contested will of her $560,000 estate, details of strange circumstances of her early morning death last February 27 after a gay party were brought out.

That phase of the testimony was not reached until late in the day and when court adjourned until tomorrow only Emanuel Burch, Negro butler, who found the Statler hefress dead in her garage, and two physicians who examined the body had testified.

Judge Don Phillips, presiding, asked Burch how the body was dressed.

"She had on a skirt and sweater," he said.

Dr. M. W. Marr, of Pinehurst, who was called when the body was discovered, and Dr. C. C. Carpenter repeated testimony given at an inquest that superficial bruises were found on Mrs. Davidson's thighs and shins.

Dr. Marr, in answer to a question by J. M. Broughton, of counsel for the caveators, said death was caused by carbon monoxide poison.

This was the verdict of the coroner's jury which left open all other questions.

Burch was the first witness called for the caveators, who are Ellsworth Statler, of England, a foster-brother; Mrs. Catherine Statler, of Tucson, Ariz., as guardian of her 4-year-old daughter, Joan Statler, a foster-niece of Mrs. Davidson, and Miss Isabella Baer, of Minneapolis, Minn.

Miss Baer was a college chum of Mrs. Davidson and in an earlier will was bequeathed her tangible property and named executrix.

Most of today's sessions were occupied with examination of W. Barton Leach, Harvard law professor who drafted the contested will which Mrs. Davidson executed 12 days before her death.

Leach was called as a "witness of the court" yesterday following introduction of the will in evidence and the appearance of Livingston Hall and Miss Victoria Mercer, both of Boston, who identified it, their signatures and Mrs. Davidson's. Davidson's case was rested following introduction of the will and the testimony of the two witnesses.

Leach said his first employment by Miss Statler was in connection with a love affair between her and a Mr. Conrad, of Boston, who was later identified by counsel as an orchestra member or bandmaster. The incident was barely touched in the testimony, and was not enlarged upon.

"I am again an amateur, learning what I can, and I haven't been so happy in years," said the former screen favorite, who had lost out when talking pictures appeared.

Hughes came to Hollywood from the New York stage to play opposite Clara Kimball Young in "The Eyes of Youth," produced in 1919. He was employed continuously from that time until 1931.

Planes, Ships Comb Sea to Find French Airliner Long Overdue

Six Aboard Craft in Flight Across South Atlantic; Messages Indicated Bad Weather Over Ocean; Northward Drift Is Hinted.

Rio de Janeiro, Feb. 11 (AP).—A search by air and sea was under way tonight for the commercial French airliner, Ville de Buenos Aires, long overdue on a flight across the South Atlantic.

Five members of the crew and one passenger were aboard the craft, operated by the French airline Air France. The passenger was Emile Barriere, of Buenos Aires, a director of the line.

The plane had not been heard from since 1 p. m. yesterday (11 a. m. Eastern standard time, Monday), when it reported it was 610 miles east of Natal, Brazil, and flying at an altitude of 400 feet. It left Natal yesterday morning and was due at Dakar, Senegal, Africa, at 10 a. m. (6 a. m., Eastern standard time), today.

Two airplanes and three cutters were sent in search of the craft off Brazil. They were the Air France seaplane Ville de Rio de Janeiro, the land plane Centauro and three Air France cutters.

Making up the crew of the missing plane were: First Pilot Ponce; Second Pilot Collenot, Navigator L'Hotelier, Mechanic Parrere, and Radio Operator Manet.

Ponce and Collenot were veteran pilots and each had seven ocean crossings to his credit. Manet was a member of the crack Air France crew which some weeks ago set a record for the flight from Paris to Buenos Aires of 68 hours 45 minutes. L'Hotelier was making his second crossing in the plane.

Previous messages from the ship indicated it was running into bad weather, one disclosing "visibility nil amid strong storm" but added, "all is well."

Aviation officials said the plane may have been carried northward by the Atlantic drift if it was forced to alight, one asserting it "might drift into the Gulf of Mexico."

The "Ville de Rio de Janeiro" started the search almost immediately after arriving on the 2,000-mile flight from Dakar to Natal. Its crew reported it had seen no signs of the sister ship.

Spurious Bills Made in Prison, Agents Reveal

San Quentin Engraving Plant Believed Source of Fake $10 Notes.

By the United Press.

San Francisco, Feb. 11.—A plot in which spurious $10 bills were manufactured within the walls of San Quentin Prison was disclosed tonight.

Capt. Thomas B. Foster, local head of the Federal Intelligence Unit, said three paroled San Quentin convicts have been arrested, two in San Francisco and one in Sacramento.

Capt. Foster said one prisoner confessed the $10 bills were turned out in the prison photo engraving shop.

Bills Passed in Seattle.

First trace of the operations came last October when a number of the bills were passed in Seattle. On December 19, Warden James Holohan, of the prison, and Frank C. Sykes, of the State Board of Prison Directors, informed Capt. Foster that one of the counterfeit bills had been found in the prison.

Last Saturday night, a taxi driver reported receiving one of the fake bills in payment for a trip from San Francisco to San Rafael, Transbay Community.

Thomas Bell, 42, San Rafael plumbing shop employe, was detained as the man who passed the bill. San Quentin records revealed Bell was paroled in June, 1935, after serving five years for drunken driving and manslaughter. The bill assertedly was traced to C. L. Parr, 39, who served two years in San Quentin for converting insured property, and was paroled last September. He was arrested after Dan Wilson, 36, former convict, said Parr had given him 38 of the bills.

Warden Holohan and prison officials conducted a careful but unavailing search for more bills. Foster said he believed the bills may have been smuggled out of the prison by a civilian employe.

The prison photo engraving plant has had as one of its main duties the production of "cuts" and plates used to illustrate the prisoners' monthly magazine, the Bulletin.

San Quentin long has been a "hot spot," with its 5,500 inmates jammed into close quarters originally built for half that number.

Inquest Scheduled In Coasting Death

February 25 has been set for the inquest into the death of 13-year-old Paul Gagnon, who was killed Monday night when his sled collided with a car operated by Dr. Oscar Lavine, near the boy's home on Thirty-first street, Mount Rainier, Md. The inquest will be at the Mount Rainier municipal building.

Town Clerk L. B. Gordon answered complaints of citizens who believed the street should have been barricaded for coasting by saying that new barricades had not been put up after boys had burned the old ones to keep warm and made off with the red lanterns.

The boy's parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. Gagnon, will take his body home to Lowell, Mass., today for burial. They were celebrating their Twenty-ninth wedding anniversary at the time their son was killed.

Prediction was made yesterday by a group of House Democrats after a talk with President Roosevelt that there would be no further reductions in the Civilian Conservation Corps.

"I predict there will be no further reductions in the personnel of the CCC," said Representative Johnson (Democrat), Oklahoma, a member of the unofficial Democratic steering committee which called at the White House.

Public Affairs Institute Adds Three Trustees

Stimson, Dickinson, Murrow Named; Reining Gets Educational Post.

Former Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson, Assistant Attorney-General John Dickinson and Edward R. Murrow, former assistant director of the Institute of International Education in New York, were named yesterday as trustees of the National Institute of Public Affairs, located in the Investment Building, Fifteenth and K streets northwest.

Frederick M. Davenort, chairman of the institute, also announced the appointment of Dr. Henry Reining, jr., of the Public Administration Faculty at Princeton university, as educational director of the institute.

Naming of the new trustees increased their membership to six. Other trustees are Louis Brownlow, director of the Public Administration Clearing House at Chicago; Eugene Meyerfi publisher of The Washington Post and former governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and William E. Sweet, former governor of Colorado.

The institute was organized in 1934 "to stimulate interest in public affairs among young people" and to "help in developing higher standards of public service" by arranging special "internships" in Government offices for young men and women.

This year, the institute, working with a three-year grant of the Rockefeller Foundation, will offer "internship" scholarships to 30 college graduates throughout the country. Applications for these scholarships are now being received by Otis Wingo, jr., executive secretary.

Cold Keeps Cumberland Voters From Registering

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 11.—Today was the last of a six-day period established by ordinance requiring new registration of city voters, and it was found that several thousand failed to get their names on the books. City Commissioner Harry Irvine advocates a two-day extension of the period, holding that the unusually severe weather has kept many voters, especially women, from registering. He favors naming next Monday and Tuesday as days for additional registration, and the advice of City Solicitor Lewis M. Wilson will be sought as to the legality of the proposed move.

The municipal primary will be held March 3, and the election March 17.

Police 'Fixing' Inquiry Starts In Liggett Case

Employer of 'Kid Cann' Says 2 Officers Made Offer of $10,000.

By the Associated Press.

Minneapolis, Feb. 11.—A grand jury investigation of charges that two Minneapolis policemen, one of high rank, offered to "fix the Kid Cann" case for $10,000, was launched today.

The inquiry, a side development in the trial of Isadore Blumenfield (Kid Cann) for the slaying of Publisher Walter Liggett, was prompted by a statement given the county attorney's office by Meyer Shuldberg, head of the liquor firm which employed Blumenfield as a salesman.

When news of Shuldberg's statement was confirmed by Assistant County Attorney Peter S. Neilson, it brought a demand from Chief of Police Frank Forestal that the identities of the accused pair be divulged.

Would Suspend Pair.

"So I can suspend them until we get this thing threshed out," he added.

"Fine," replied Neilson, "naturally, the chief will want this information. He will get it in the proper time."

Neilson said Shuldberg named one of the officers, and "he is near the top."

Shuldberg alleged the two policemen came to his home Christmas day and proposed to get Mrs. Liggett to change her identification of "Kid Cann" as her husband's slayer if Shuldberg would give them $10,000. Neilson said this sum was to have been turned over to an unidentified third party.

The liquor dealer was served later in the day with a subpoena to appear before the grand jury, now in session, to tell his story.

The grand jury's sudden decision to delve into the Shuldberg charge came as the jurors were debating the advisability of inquiring into charges of widespead vice and crime in Minneapolis, or to defer such an examination until after Blumenfield's trial.

Throughout the day in Blumenfield's trial, he adhered to his story that he was in a downtown barbershop when Liggett was slain by a machine-gunner in an alley near his home. He reiteraied that he was innocent of the killing.

Asked under cross-examination if he knew who was in the automobile from which the death shots were fired, he said:

"I don't know who was in the car. I had nothing to do with that, not a thing in the world."

"Kid Cann" said he met Liggett only once, in the hotel apartment of Mrs. Annette Fawcett, divorced wife of W. B. Fawcett, magazine publisher. He testified Liggett "was intoxicated at that meeting" and that the publisher "made a pass" at him. The meeting ended in a friendly way, however, he added.

KILL THIS Tax

Selfish interests want Congress to put an additional tax of 5¢ to 10¢ on every pound of Margarine. These tax bills should be killed. They are H. R. 9672 by Culkin of New York, H. R. 9865 by Boileau of Wisconsin, and H. R. 10671 by Pierce of Oregon.

IT is proposed to levy a ruinous tax of anywhere from 5¢ to 10¢ per pound on Margarine on the theory that the economy of Margarine is a menace to our dairy industry.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, the average man should eat at least 36 pounds of table fats every year for his physical well-being.

Actually we eat only 21 pounds per capita of which 18 pounds are creamery butter and 3 pounds are Margarine.

Although Margarine sells for about one half the price of butter, ten times as much butter is consumed at the higher price.

The Dane eats nearly 3 pounds more butter per year than the American and in addition about 45 pounds of wholesome Margarine on his bread and in cooking.

Apparently Margarine has not ruined the butter industry in Denmark.

To tax Margarine because it costs less than butter would be like taxing Fords because they cost less than Lincolns; like taxing Iowa corn in favor of Dakota wheat; like taxing Georgia peaches to raise the price of Oregon apples.

Margarine's lower selling price is attractive to the thrifty and to the millions of people with limited means.

Will a tax on this wholesome and nourishing food product sell more butter to people who cannot now afford the higher price of butter?

The answer is No! A tax on Margarine is a tax for selfish interests, an impossible levy on the food budgets of the masses who cannot afford to foot the bill.

Effort to Block '25 Arms Parley Told at Hearing

Belgian Firm Asked Aid of Colt's, Munitions Inquiry Learns.

By the Associated Press.

Evidence that a great European munitions firm sought American aid in scuttling the 1925 conference for the limitation of traffic in war materials was presented yesterday before the Senate Munitions Committee.

From the files of the Colt's Patent Firearms Co. the committee produced a letter from Fabrique Nationale des Armes de Guerre, of Belgium, urging it to "get busy in the high places" and seek delay in the appointment of the American delegations.

Colt's replied that it was "unwise to approach the State Department" on the subject and that the best course was to "let sleeping dogs lie." The Fabrique Nationale letter said the same communication was being sent to the Remington Arms Co.

Bribery Suggested.

The development followed a brief investigation of the Army Ordnance Association, which produced among other things a suggestion from a British army officer that judicious bribery and the appeal of the "fairest of fair ladies" could be combined effectively in the sale of munitions.

Chairman Nye (Republican), North Dakota, of the committee, condemned such munition sale practices as "something more than corrupt."

The Colt's phase of the investigation went somewhat extensively into the sale of machint guns in South American countries. Correspondence was introduced purporting to show a Colt's agent warned the Bolivian Minister that unless he hastened to order a consignment of guns they would be offered to his country's enemy, Paraguay.

Prosecution Urged.

Fabrique Nationale's letter said the company considered "that in order to lengthen the controversies (and thus wear out in the long run the bodies occupied with this question) a very simple solution would be to lead your Government not to name representatives . . . or at least to delay the nominations as long as possible." It added:

"This matter representing for both of our companies extreme importance, we do not doubt that upon receipt of this letter you will wish to immediately get busy in the high places and have steps taken without delay along the above-mentioned lines, using all influence possible."

The British officer's comment was contained in a letter taken from the files of the Army Ordnance Association, together with disclosures that organization, devoted to pushing industrial mobilization for war, included in its membership many business men who would be affected commercially.

A stack of letters and the testimony of L. C. Codd, the association's executive secretary, were offered as evidence to show the organization worked for division of relief funds to Army projects and was in close co-operation with Army officers.

The committee took up the affairs of the ordnance association prior to examining the activities of the Colt Patent Firearms Co. in supplying machine guns to the Army.

Codd testified that a year ago, due to much sensational publicity on the activities of arms manufacturers, he asked Maj. Gen. J. F. C. Fuller, of the British army, for an article on that subject for publication in the association's periodical Army Ordnance.

It was Fuller's letter of reply that arrested the interest of the committee. Nye read sections of it explaining he was obliged to omit other parts because they were unfit to appear in the committee's record. Pertinent paragraphs were:

"The chief culprits are the middlemen or munitions contractors, who nearly always are outside the firms. * * *

"For instance, were I one, I would go to a —— State (the name was omitted by Senator Nye), dine the ministes of war, produce the fairest of fair ladies and then suggest that his country's army wanted a new M. G. (apparently a machine gun). He would say, 'How much do I get?' (for the lady would be asking him a great deal). I would say, 'Ten per cent,' and I would go to Vickers or some other firm and say, 'I want 500 M. G.'s at a price which will enable me to scoop 30 per cent' (20 per cent for myself and 10 per cent for the minister). The general result is the high price for armaments.

"This is all very corrupt and the firms know it, but they all make their profits, and have to, so it is hard to blame them. They compete against each other and at times, no doubt, they buy out each others' agents. These gentry don't know one end of a gun from the other * * *" (Deleted by Senator Nye.)

Codd was quick to express the opinion that Fuller had been "extremely hard on the munitions industry." Nye as promptly challenged the statement.

'Red Rider' Change Sought

blurted out, "but it is asinine."

And the House roared with laughter.

The House in recent years has not heard a more severe tongue-lashing than that given to Blanton by Sisson, who then announced he would engage in no further disputes with the Texan on the House floor.

After assailing Blanton for evading the issue whenever he talks about the anti-red rider, Sisson referred to the former's attack on him on the House floor last week because of his speech at the Cosmos Club.

"The gentleman spent considerable time in telling how fair he was in this matter," Sisson said. "Well although I have been in Congress only two terms I have been here long enough to know what brand of fairness to expect from the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Blanton.

"A man in public life—even a member of Congress—is bound to be subjected to criticism whether on the floor of Congress or otherwise, publicly or privately. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. Blanton, is the only member of Congress I know that won't take such criticism standing up."

Charges Personal Attacks.

Sisson continued, declaring that Blanton not only evaded the issues but "resorts to personalities and uses his Congressional immunity to attack men like Mr. Noyes and to attack educators such as Dr. Charters, on the floor of the House of Representatives, where he is safe by reason of his Congressional immunity and where they can not reach him."

Discussing the method by which the anti-Red rider was "slipped through" Congress, the New Yorker defended himself against Blanton's charge that he was unfamiliar with the rules of the House thus:

"The long and varied experience of the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Blanton, has shown him how far he can skate on thin ice without falling in the water."

The effect of the rider, Sisson declared, has been to suppress freedom of speech, to outlaw academic freedom and to make public school teachers subject to coercion.

Effect of Rider Criticised.

The rider, he said, "instead of leading the boys and girls to believe that communism is opposed to our economic, social and political system in America, has a tendency to produce the opposite effect.

"It has invested communism with a magical, mysterious charm which inevitably leads the average boy and girl to go to communistic meetings and organizations to find out what it is all about."

Because the teachers are required to sign a statement every month that they have not taught communism in order to get their pay checks, he added, most of them "ban all mention of the political, economic or social system prevailing in Russia or anywhere else they understand it to be tainted with communism."

When Blanton took the floor to reply, he opened with the statement:

"I never start a fight and I never run away. And I do all my fighting standing up."

Protection of Students.

He then reiterated his previous assertion that the anti-red rider was passed in regular order and he repeated his ridicule of Sisson for not being on the floor at the time to raise a point of order.

"When we stopped the teaching of communism in Washington public schools—and we have stopped it—we did it for the protection of the students," he said.

Asked for an interpretation of the word "teaching" in the rider, Blanton said:

"Why, of course, the teachers can teach that communism is a subversive influence and that it teaches there is no God. We have no objection to that."

Roosevelt Thanks WPA Worker, Writing, 'You Have Helped Me'

By the Associated Press.

Roosevelt, N. Y., Feb. 11.—Louis Stancourt, 38, WPA employe who wrote a letter to President Roosevelt and then forgot it, got an answer today.

Stancourt said his note in praise of the President and the WPA project to prepare an "American Guide" was inspired by indignation over a radio speaker's attack on "boondoggling" and the Administration.

Today he exhibited this reply:

"My Dear Mr. Stancourt: Though we have not met, your letter makes me believe that I can call you a friend—an understanding friend.

"It is not alone because you as a soldier of the late war have thought of me as your Commander in Chief.

"It is not alone because you, like me, feel a hurt when people who do not know hold up to ridicule our efforts to do useful things with the public monies.

"It is not alone because you tell me that the 'American Guide' is going to be a useful fact-book for our while country.

"It is most of all because you give me the blessings of the unknown men whose voices seem never to be heard—because you rightly believe that I do try, as best as I may, to understand the human and spiritual problems of the millions in our great land who are loyal to our common ideals and who want to hold their heads high. I am grateful to you. You have helped me.

"Faithfully yours,

"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

Stancourt, who lives here with his wife, two children and mother-in-law, is a World War veteran, but he didn't recall mentioning the bonus in his letter. He kept no copy.

Stancourt lives not only in the town of Roosevelt, but on Roosevelt avenue as well.

Both were named for Theodore Roosevelt, however, during his term as President. The town, in Nassau County, Long Island, formerly was called Rum Point.

England Plans 5,600 Planes By March, 1937

Building of 3,000 Craft in Year Would Leave Germany Still in Lead.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London, Feb. 11.—Great Britain's minimum goal in the air armaments race is 5,600 fighting planes by March 1, 1937—12 months and 18 days distant—foreign experts here said tonight.

This would require, in addition to Britain's potential present air force of approximately 2,640 warplanes, between 2,500 and 3,000 military aircraft. It was said these are now being built.

It was stated reliably that the number of first line planes in the British fighting force, without counting reserves, totals 1,050, but it is believed that for every known first line plane, Britain has two in reserve in various stages of assembly.

Home Defense Units.

These 1,050 first-line planes are entirely in home defense units and a normal force of approximately 300 planes of first line type must be added as in foreign service squadrons.

The British air force expansion program was originally timed for completion four years from July 1, 1934, but has been speeded up so it will be finished by March 1, 1937. And before this scheme is completed, it is believed Britain will plunge into a new air expansion program as part of her planned $2,000,000,000 armament program now before Parliament.

The new program will involve addition of substantial groups to both the fleet air group and the Royal Air Force in Britain's foreign possessions. These plans were stimulated by realization that British air strength in the Mediterranean area is inadequate.

To accommodate these new forces, Britain is building 30 new airdromes with complete ground equipment and personnel. Nine new civil flying schools are being opened to offer initial training to students for the R. A. F. After ten weeks' training there, they go to Regular Army R. A. F. schools for advanced training. The R. A. F. is opening six new schools for this purpose.

By March 1, 1937, the personnel of the regular air force will be increased by 2,500 officers and 28,000 men.

Lags Behind Germany.

It was recalled that Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin has declared repeatedly that Britain must possess an air force at least as strong as the strongest foreign air power within striking distance of the British Isles.

With this objective still in view, it is believed Britain will lag behind Germany even when the present program is completed March 1, 1937. A prominent United States military expert said he estimated German air strength now at 7,000 to 10,000 planes. This is almost double what Britain plans for a year from now.

While Britain is straining every nerve to expand her air force, she is not waiting for emergence of the ideal type fighting plane. The key to British expansion appears to be the training of thousands of skilled pilots. But even in this respect, Britain seems to be in a great hurry. She requires only 90 hours of flying for a pilot's rating, while the United States Army, for example, requires more than twice that amount of flying experience.

Borah to Enter Illinois Primary As Foe of Knox

To File in Ohio Contest on May 12; He Challenges Others to Follow.

Senator William E. Borah will enter the Illinois Presidential primaries April 14, in opposition to Col. Frank Knox, Chicago publisher, a month before the Idahoan makes his bid for Republican support in Ohio, it was learned yesterday.

Borah will, probably announce formally his decision today or tomorow, as soon as he is advised that the necessary petitions have been signed, and are ready for filing.

Col. Knox, the only other Republican candidate who has signified a similar intention, has petitions signed and ready to file. Knox again withheld his decision to enter Ohio May 12, however, as did Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas. Landon is not expected to file in Illinois.

Meanwhile Lincoln's birthday celebrations today throughout the country offered a sounding board for eulogies to the great emancipator, mostly coupled with partisan interpretations of the principles for which he stood.

Lincoln's native State of Illinois leaped into the political spotlight with the Borah and Knox disclosures, as the 127th anniversary of his birth made his tomb at Springfield once more a national mecca. From the White House, the President sent a wreath to be laid on his tomb.

Test of Strength.

Seeking a test of strength in the Midwest and West, Borah not only has announced he will enter Ohio, but has challenged other bona fide candidates to follow him.

Democratic leaders here meanwhile decided to enter President Roosevelt's name on the Illinois primary ballots, following a similar decision recently regarding Ohio.

After a conference yesterday with Postmaster General James A. Farley, Patrick A. Nash, Democratic national committeeman, declared the President will have the full support of the Cook County and the State central committee.

Resolutions supporting the President have been adopted by both organizations. Nash and Bruce Campbell, chairman of the Democratic State central committee, conferred later in the day with Senator William H. Dieterich (Democrat), Illinois. Both indicated that efforts will be made to pile up a large primary vote for Roosevelt, pledging the entire Democratic delegation. It was pointed out that the President might benefit psychologically from such a show of strength.

To Attend Meetings.

Nash came here to attend meetings of the Democratic committee on convention arrangements, and not to confer with Farley on the President's Illinois plans, he said. It is known, however, that Farley was delaying a decision on entering the President in Illinois until after he talked with Nash.

In Illinois, petitions are already being circulated for Borah, with Edgar J. Cooke playing an active role, it was said.

Coincidence of plans for the President to go into Ohio and Illinois, disclosed at virtually the same time Borah decided to file in those States, was broadly commented on here yesterday. Although speculation and rumors were rife, there was no authoritative explanation of the President's action. Nash admitted that the President's decision to file in Illinois was unexpected.

One report attached significance to the recent White House luncheon conference between the President and Borah, and rumored that the President welcomed Borah as an opponent in those States, because it might tend to kill off as clear-cut campaign issues certain New Deal measures, for which the Idahoan voted.

Will Enter Oregon.

Borah already has intimated he will enter Oregon, and in one quarter yesterday it was said he may enter Nebraska, viewed as a Langdon stronghold.

Col. Knox is expected to file his formal declaration of candidacy in Illinois tomorrow. Although a resident Chicagoan, Knox is not native to Illinois, as is Borah, who was born in Fairfield, Wayne County. The projected contest between the two is expected to claim much of the spotlight from the Ohio primaries, May 12, in which to date Borah is the only Republican entry.

Associated Press dispatches quoted E. D. Schorr, State chairman of the Ohio Republican organization, as stating in Columbus that Knox is "thinking seriously" of going into the Ohio primaries. Schorr was said to have been in touch with friends of both Gov. andon and Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, but volunteered no information on who else might file in Ohio.

Associated Press dispatches from Chicago said former Senator Reed, of Missouri, an opponent of New Deal policies, would not support the President for re-election, but hoped he could "avoid the agony" of voting the first time for a Republican. Suggesting Al Smith, former Gov. Ritchie, of Maryland, and Ely, of Massachusetts, for the nomination, Reed said if Roosevelt is nominated and there are only two tickets in the field, a lot of Democrats will "stay home."

Birthday Observances.

At today's Lincoln birthday observances the Civil War President will be quoted pro and con on current Federal trends by friends and opponents of the New Deal.

In Portland, Ore., former President Hoover will address a Lincoln Day dinner on "The State of the Union."

In Indianapolis, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace will defend the Administration, before the Indianapolis Farm Bureau.

Senator L. J. Dickinson (Republican), Iowa, will speak at Greensboro, N. C.; Senator Frederic Steiwer (Republican), Oregon, at Providence, R. I.; and Senator Vandenberg, in New York.

In lin ewith recent moves to build up the Republican National committee's Washington staff, Chairman Henry P. Fletcher announced yesterday that Arthur M. Curtis, of Springfield, Mo., will be brought here March 1 to assist him in organization work. Curtis, now practicing law, last July was elected Republican National committeeman from Missouri, to fill the unexpired term of Dr. E. B. Clements.

Maryland Decision On Flogging Asked

Baltimore, Feb. 11 (AP).—State Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor today was studying the question of whether Maryland public school authorities could legally inflict corporal punishment on pupils.

The ruling was requested by State's Attorney James H. Pugh, of Montgomery County. Recently, three pupils of the Takoma Park-Silver Spring Junior High School said they were whipped by W. B. Marks, the principal.

Pugh asked O'Conor to determine if there were any "legal authority or right for anyone connected with State schools to chastise children." If such a law exists, O'Conor was asked to determine which school officials were empowered to carry out the punishment.

As an aftermath of the alleged whippings, the Woodside Women's Club and parents of children in the school passed resolutions asking the County Board of Education to seek repeal of a State law permitting corporal punishment of school children.

Berwyn to Ask Incorporation Poll for Town

Legislature Will Receive Request for Permission on Referendum.

The special session of the Maryland Legislature will be asked to authorize a referendum of the citizens of Berkyn for incorporation of the town, the Berkyn District Civic Association has decided.

Voters have expressed their desire to proceed with incorporation, acording to the report submitted by the special charter committee of the association. The group is composed of W. F. Mulligan, L. W. Boughton and A. J. Thomas. T. Raymond Burch, association president, appointed two new members, Owen T. Wyatt and Clifton C. Brill, to assist the committee in drafting a bill which will be presented to the Prince Georges County delegation in the egislature.

The proposed charter will provide for a five-man commission from which a mayor or president will be selected. It also will call for a maximum town levy of 20 cents on the $100 of assessed property valuation, a return of 74 per cent of the gasoline tax fund for road purposes, and for necessary bailiffs and town officers. It will expressly forbid special assessments and bond issues.

Instruction was given the association's public utilities committee to petition the Maryland Public Commission for aid in obtaining improved street-car service. Present car conditions were termed "deplorable."

According to reports submitted at the session of the Hyattsville council Monday night, a surplus in the town treasury of approximately $15,000 will exist at the end of the fiscal year this spring.

Plans were made to expend the fund for improvement of streets badly in need of repair. A joint meeting of the council's road and finance committees will be called soon to decide which thoroughfares shall be improved. Robert C. Meredith is chairman of the road committee, and Arthur C. Moon is head of the finance group.

The council adopted an ordinance authorizing permanent improvements on 10 streets, the work to be financed through a PWA grant of about $26,000, or 45 per cent of the total estimated cost.

Improvements were petitioned by more than 50 per cent of the abutting property-owners on each street, who will bear the remaining cost of 55 per cent of the total expense.

Streets on which permanent improvements, mostly street and sidewalk paving, will be made, are Sherman, Sheridan, Garfield, Moore, Arundel and Rheems avenues; Shepherd, Quincy and Percy streets and Forest drive.

Work is scheduled to start in 60 days. Bids must be submitted to the council by March 9.

The council authorized the Keystone Automobile Club to proceed with the erection of 27 directional road signs in the town.

Free American, Ethiopia Tells Chief of Tribe

Release of Canadian Is Also Asked; Family Treated Well.

By the Associated Press.

Addis Ababa, Feb. 11.—A shackled American missionary and his Canadian colleague, held prisoners in the southwestern war zone by a local Ethiopian chieftain, have been ordered released, it was disclosed today.

The men are the Rev. Harold Street, of Paxton, Ill., who was imprisoned with a dog chain fastened to his legs, and the Rev. John Trewin, of Toronto, who was not shackled.

Mrs. Street and her four children were held under guard at a mission station.

Crown Prince Asfa Wosan, of Ethiopia, it was learned, ordered release of the North Americans two days ago, but because of a lack of communication facilities with southwestern Gamo Province, it could not be learned immediately if the order was carried out.

The missionaries, attached to the Sudan Interior Mission, had refused to leave the danger zone when ordered to do so by Ethiopian provincial officers.

A letter received by the Government from Mrs. Street said her husband and Mr. Trewin were arrested January 27 at their station at Shama, 250 miles southwest of Addis Ababa.

The next day, Mrs. Street related, the men were taken to Chencha, capital of Gamo Province, 50 miles northward, while she and her children remained at Shama under guard.

Wife Charges Blackmail.

The Ethiopian government denied reports published abroad that eight persons were imprisoned.

Blackmail was charged by Mrs. Street. She said her native landlord at Shama sought to obtain money from the two missionaries, but when they refused to pay, persuaded the local chieftain to order the men to leave under terms of a government order that foreigners should not remain in a war danger zone.

She said all of them were well treated, and when soldiers came to make the arrests January 27 they had taken tea with the family and allowed Mr. Street to remain overnight with his family. Dr. T. A. Lambie, field director of the Ethiopian mission service, also said both men were well treated.

Government officials here described the arrest as due to the "overzealousness" of the local chieftain. They pointed out, however, that before the war started the British and American diplomatic representatives accepted an Ethiopian proposal that American or British subjects could be ordered to leave any dangerous area.

The officials said they deplored the refusal of the two missionaries to obey the orders to leave, but indicate that now they would be allowed to remain.

State Department Advised.

By the Associated Press.

The State Department announced yesterday the receipt of official reports from Minister Cornelius Van H. Engert at Addis Ababa, asserting he had been advised of the arrest in the interior of Ethiopia of the Rev. H. B. Street, an American conected with the Sudan Interior Mission, and a Canadian member of the same mission.

Van Engert said he had taken the matter up with the Ethiopian authorities and had requested the release of Street if such action had not already been taken.

He quoted the Ethiopian minister for foreign affairs as stating that he had no detailed report of the incident, but believed it might have been due to the efforts of local authorities to induce missionaries to concentrate at certain specified points.

Van Engert said his information was that Street and the Canadian, the Rev. John Trewin, were arrested on January 27 by local authorities at Shama and taken to Chencha, the provincial capital of Sidamo.

The American minister did not mention anything concerning the detention of Street's family.

N. Y. Strike Awaits Further Parleys

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—As reports persisted that a broad, general outline of a plan to avert a strike had been shaped, garment manufacturers and union leaders recessed late today with a promise for further parleys before a strike call would be sounded.

Julius Hochman, general manager of the joint board of the Dressmakers' Union, said "We have agreed on general principles, but we still have many details to settle."

Representatives of both sides agreed to report to Mayor F. H. LaGuardia tomorrow afternoon. The mayor has been making intensive efforts to halt the threatened walkout of 105,000 garment workers seeking jobber-contractor reforms in the industry.

Thursday has tentatively been set for the strike call.

The threatened strike of hotel bus boys, chambermaids and doormen also continued to hold off at the request of Mayor LaGuardia.

Council Moves To Codify Acts In Falls Church

W. S. Brown Authorized to Plan Printing of Ordinances.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Clarendon 43-F-31.

The town council of Falls Church, Va., plans to compile and revise all town ordinances and regulations. Recently WPA workers checked all the town minutes since April 9, 1917, the date of the last compilation of ordinances, and made copies of all ordinances enacted by the various town councils since that time.

The council at its meeting Monday night authorized Councilman W. S. Brown, chairman of the public laws and property committee, to revise and codify the ordinances for submission to the council so that they can be printed.

Mrs. John S. Bethune, Mrs. W. H. Heartel and Mrs. Guy Erwin, representing the Falls Church Women's Club, asked the council to have trash collections made more often and to inaugurate a local garbage collection service. The request was referred to the sanitation committee for recommendations.

Mayor L. P. Daniel submitted a model plumbing code for the town. It was referred to the water and sanitation committee with the recommendation that it hold a public hearing on the question. The code similar to the one now in effect in Arlington County includes the licenses of plumbers by a local plumbing board.

The right of way along Broad street was turned over to the State highway commission from the intersection of the Lee boulevard west about a half-mile. The State plans to widen and improve this section of the street into the town.

The sewing project sponsored in Fairfax County by the WPA will hold an exhibit of the work accomplished by the women on Friday in the County trial Justice courtroom. This exhibit was planned for last Friday, but was postponed because of the snow. The exhibit will open at 9 a. m. and continue through the entire day.

The Northern Virginia Past Matrons and Patrons Association, which was to have met at McLean Friday night, as guests of the members from Sharon Chapter, will postpone its meeting one month on account of the death last week of Mrs. Lorin Magarity, a former officer of the association.

Bids on Hospital Work At Roanoke Are Opened

The Northeastern Construction Co., of Winston-Salem, N. C., submitting a main bid of $311,844, was the low bidder today on a new hospital building for the Roanoke veterans facility, according to the Associated Press. The bids were opened by the Veterans Administration.

The Northeastern Company was lowest among nine contractors submitting base bids, along with alternates to include construction outside of the main building work. The base bids called for completion of the work in approximately a year.

School Alumni Of Alexandria Plan Banquet

Prettyman, of District, to Be Chief Speaker; Bar Group Names Chiefs.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

E. Barrett Prettyman, corporation counsel for the District, will be the principal speaker at the George Washington High School Alumni Association banquet to be held on Monday night. He is a former member of the faculty of the school.

The banquet will be held at 8 o'clock in the Lee room of the George Mason Hotel, presided over by Fred Petitt, president of the association, and will be followed by a dance. Mrs. Dorothy Wilburn is chairman of the committee on arrangements. Jack Hoeft is ticket chairman. The banquet opens a campaign for membership in the association.

President Albert V. Bryan, of the Alexandria Bar Association, has named the following committees for the year:

John Barton Phillips, A. Stanley King and E. Joel Treger, grievance; Richard L. Ruffner, Frederick L. Flynn and James N. Colasanto, legal ethics; Irving Diener, Leo P. Harlow and Waller Barrett Smith, legislative; Andrew W. Clarke, John P. Strauss and Randolph Davis, publicity.

A legislative committee composed of Irving Diener, Thomas R. Dyson, jr., and Frederick L. Flynn presented a report without recommendations, regarding a number of legal changes that have been suggested, especially a change in the divorce laws; also a change in the serving of process on nonresidents.

The association went on record as favoring the method of filling vacancies existing in the civil and police court by appointment of the judge of the corporation court for the unexpired term of the incumbent.

Judge William P. Woolls, in corporation court, has sentenced the following persons who pleaded guilty after indictment:

Steve Hoffman, burglary, two indictments, pleaded guilty and sentenced to two years on each count, to run consecutively; Richard O'Neil, two indictments for burglary and one for entering, one year on each count; W. E. Bozman, stealing automobile, suspended sentence of one year with the understanding that he report to the court once each month for that year; Charles Dimicelli, burglary, six months in jail; James Washington and Robert Washington, grand larceny, the former given two years and the latter one year and the latter two years.

Hearing was set for February 28 next, in the case of John B. Nicholson, indicted for involuntary manslaughter. Nicholson was the driver of the truck which struck an automobile in which Police Officer Louis F. Shaw, of Arlington County, and his prisoner, William H. Harrison, of Chicago, were burned to death on December 6.

A delegation of 50 members of Alexandria Lodge, No. 758, B. P. O. Elks, will leave the local Elks Home at 7 o'clock this evening in special buses to attend the celebration of the fifty-fourth anniversary of the Washington Lodge of Elks.

Robert F. Green and Harry Baader have been named jury commissioners for the Corporation Court by Judge William P. Woolls. They will select a list of names of persons who may be called for jury duty during the coming year.

Miss Eleanor Watkins, public relations chairman of the Alexandria Business and Professional Women's Club, at the meeting held on Monday evening in the Lee Room of the George Mason Hotel, announced that Representative Isabelle Greenway has accepted an invitation to be the guest speaker at the annual Public Relations Dinner of the local club, to be held on Thursday, March 19.

Founder's Day was celebrated last night by the Parent-Teacher Association in the auditorium of the Jefferson School annex, with a special program of entertainment. The principal speaker was Mrs. E. E. Carver, the first president of the General Parent-Teacher Association Council.

The Advisory Council of the Alexandria Chapter, Order of De Molay, has elected the following officers: A. M. Sherwood, chairman of Advisory Council; William Edwin Lee, secretary, and Roger C. Sullivan, adviser.

Federation Rejected Program Without Study, Says ABC Chief

Fowler Asserts He's 'Amazed' at Action Condemning More Than Half of Board's Recommendations in Montgomery.

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post.
1111 Oak Ave., Silver Spring, Md.
Telephone Shepherd 2363.

Expressing "amazement" that the Montgomery County Civic Federation adopted resolutions opposing the legislative program of the Liquor Control Board for Montgomery County without first investigating the merits of the program, Ralph S. Fowler, chairman of the Liquor Control Board, last night said:

"We are amazed at the action of the Civic Federation last night which condemned more than half of the board's recommendations for legislation amending the present alcoholic beverage laws. So far as we have been able to determine, the federation's committee did not conduct any investigation or make any effort to determine the board's reasons for its recommendations. Moreover, the matter was presented to the federation without previous notice and without affording the liquor board any opportunity to present its position.

"Had the federation had the benefit of the research and investigation which the board conducted prior to making its proposals, we are confident that the action of the federation would have been entirely different.

"We sincerely hope that before any other civic body takes any definite position with respect to this program, they will investigate the conditions as the board knows them to exist and will afford the board an opportunity to be heard in support of its recommendations.

"The board is not endeavoring to exploit the wet or dry question, but under the obligations imposed upon it by law, is endeavoring to regulate properly the sale of alcoholic beverages within the county and to protect Montgomery County merchants who are engaging in a business lawfully permitted by the laws of the county."

Enactment of legislation to empower the Montgomery County commissioners to both raise and lower assessments on real property with a view to equalizing real estate assessments was urged by the Montgomery County Civic Federation at its monthly meeting in the Bethesda elementary school.

Seven other legislative proposals recommended by the special legislative committee headed by Col. O. P. M. Brown, of Edgemoor, were approved by the meeting. They were:

Amend the county liquor law to provide that appeals from decisions of the county liquor control board on granting or refusal of liquor licenses be made to the county commissioners instead of the State liquor board; indorse the principle of the uniform vehicle code; oppose authorizing the Park and Planning Commission to establish local park districts; oppose extension of the hour for selling beer from midnight to 2 a. m.; oppose retail sale of wine with an alcoholic content of more than 14 per cent; oppose permitting alcoholic beverage license holders to change their type of licenses without advertisement and hearing, and oppose proposals of the liquor control board to pay its own bills and deposit its gross receipts with the county treasurer monthly.

The four liquor law changes opposed by the federation are a part of a seven-point legislative program recommended last week by the liquor control board. Their opposition was voted after a lengthy debate during which several amendments and parliamentary technicalities raised were voted down.

The Parent-Teacher Association will hold its monthly meeting tomorrow night at the school. Brooke Johns will entertain the association following the business session.

Final action on the adoption of a constitution will feature a meeting of the Takoma-Silver Spring Parent-Teacher Association at a meeting today at 8 p. m. Among questions to be decided is whether or not payment of dues shall be a requirement of membership. The appointment of school trustees will be discussed.

Woodside Park Civic Association will meet tonight at 8 o'clock in Jesup Blair Community House, Silver Spring, Md.

Miss Rebecca Keys, Linden, Md., has been appointed a notary public for Montgomery County, it was announced yesterday by Clayton K. Watkins, clerk of the court.

Slemp Movement Grows in Virginia

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Bristol, Va., Feb. 11—Republican leaders of the Ninth Virginia Congressional District were converging on Bristol today, constituting the vanguard of a small army of delegates who will descend on the city tomorrow for the convention at which the party's Congressional nominee will be named.

Adding impetus to a movement expected to result in the district's indorsement of C. Bascom Slemp, of Big Stone Gap, for national committeeman from Virginia, succeeding Joseph Crupper, present committeeman, Republicans of Lee, Smyth and Dickenson counties adopted resolutions Saturday favoring his candidacy. Scott and Wise County Republicans previously had adopted resolutions favoring the Wise countian for the post.

John Anderson, Bristol attorney, who managed the Sam Hurley campaign for Congress in 1926 and who has been active in Republican circles of the district for more than 15 years, today was rumored in line for the Congressional nomination. Others who have been prominently mentioned as possible nominees include Fred Parks, of Abingdon, who opposed John W. Flannagan, Democratic incumbent, two years ago, and Ryland Craft, of Gate City.

Mr. Prettyman's Resignation.

In a great many major undertakings of the District government during the last two years the unswervingly constructive influence of Corporation Counsel Prettyman has been easily discernible. No District official has injected more energy and skill into the solution of difficult local problems. Consequently his decision to resign on March 15 will elicit from the public whom he has so diligently served regrets no less keen than those of his colleagues in the municipal administration.

Not all of Mr. Prettyman's work has been brought into the limelight. His very intelligent opinion on the so-called "red rider," which forbade the "teaching" of communism in District schools, has been widely read. But the less familiar regulations he prepared for administration of the social security law will doubtless prove far more important in the long run. At no time during his tenure of office has Mr. Prettyman been content merely to perform routine duties. His keen mind has concentrated upon a great variety of local problems with happy results for his fellow citizens. It is unfortunate that his recommendations have been so frequently neglected by Congress.

Delving into the legal aspects of the traffic problem, Mr. Prettyman devised a system of magistrates' courts to relieve congestion in the police courts and to simplify the handling of petty cases. Likewise he found a practical way to counteract the small loans racket. More important still is his measure to enlarge the powers of the District Commissioners over routine municipal functions. In each case he struck at major defects in Washington's much-battered system of local government.

It is no exaggeration to say that Mr. Prettyman has performed a far larger function than that of Corporation Counsel. He has also been an admirable adviser on policies, legislation and questions of community welfare. That record of service is the more remarkable because of the unsatisfactory conditions under which our municipal government functions. Men of this caliber constitute an asset which the District can ill afford to lose.

Parole For Caspar Holstein?

A jail sentence ordered by a New York court in the case of a former "king" of the Harlem numbers racket has implications that reach beyond that district. One Caspar Holstein was the convict, a native of the Virgin Islands. Though his lawyers presented a list of philanthropies rivaling his record of nine previous arrests, he has been packed off for an indeterminate term, not to exceed three years.

The conviction must have much interest for Dr. Paul M. Pearson, now an assistant director of housing for the Public Works Administration but until last year Governor of the Virgin Islands. Though originally appointed to the islands by President Hoover, Dr. Pearson was asked to continue on by President Roosevelt, much to the disgust of the patronage hounds. Of these, Holstein was a leader, operating by remote control from Harlem. Partly through his efforts, an adequate amount of dissatisfaction was stirred up and Dr. Pearson was recalled.

The conviction of the Harlem racketeer has further significance. Likewise opposed to the Pearson administration in the Virgin Islands was Judge T. Webber Wilson, a one-time Democratic Congressman from Mississippi. Ironically enough, the storm which swept Dr. Pearson out of office carried Wilson away, too, in spite of highly energetic efforts made by Senator Tydings in his behalf.

On Judge Wilson's return to Washington, a job was soon arranged for him in the shape of a seat on the Federal Parole Board. The fact that no vacancy on the board existed was easily overcome by an abrupt demand for the resignation of Dr. Amy N. Stannard, an expert psychiatrist of long and faithful service. Accordingly, Mr. Wilson today is one who passes on applications from Federal prisoners seeking early releases.

At least he has one qualification: he should be familiar with the workings of the criminal mind. Caspar Holstein, now slated for the penitentiary, was less than a year ago publicly extolled and asked to address the Virgin Islands' court by this Judge Wilson, who now sits on the Federal Parole Board.

Two Different Systems.

Great Britain's unwritten constitution is repeatedly dragged into discussions over the Supreme Court's power to invalidate acts of Congress. If every act of Parliament is ipso facto constitutional, critics of recent Supreme Court opinions ask, why should the legislative powers of Congress be so restricted? The answer, of course, is that the American system of government is, for better or worse, totally different from that of Great Britain.

With the advantages of the British system in mind, Representative Cross, of Texas, has devised a plan to forbd the Supreme Court to pass upon constitutional issues in cases appealed from lower tribunals. More recently William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has taken the position that "a liberal interpretation of the spirit and purpose of the Constitution would enable us to meet changing situations as easily as under the unwritten constitution of Great Britain." In both cases the distinctive and fundamental differences between the British and American forms of government have been ignored.

The British government is unitary in character. That is to say, Parliament exercises supreme power over the entire country. Local governments derive their authority solely from the national legislature. In the United States the reverse is true. Congress derives its powers from a specific grant by formerly sovereign States. If this Federal system is to be preserved, it is essential to take constitutional limitations on Federal authority seriously, the more so because the drift of the times is all toward centralization of power.

If our Federal system is to be compared to Great Britain's political institutions it would seem more logical to consider the entire British Empire, and not a compact little island not much larger than the average State in this country. The government at London no longer attempts to legislate for Canada, Australia, or South Africa. Even India has now been granted a considerable measure of autonomy. Of course, the self-governing British dominions are not comparable to our States. But Mr. Green's observation provokes the retort that the British Empire has met changing situations easily precisely because of that decentralization of powers which our Constitution aims to preserve for the United States.

If the A. F. of L. believes that the interests of organized labor can best be promoted by constitutional amendment it is completely within its rights in advocating such a change. But suggestions to the effect that the Supreme Court should take upon itself the task of changing our form of government are dangerous doctrine. By this method the Bill of Rights could be swept away as readily as the regulatory powers now vested in the States. For that reason it would seem that organized labor should be among the last to advocate camouflaged nullification of the basic law.

The Same Old Story.

It was the same old story when the parents of Washington met with the Board of Education: the city's classrooms are overcrowded; children are being taught in basements and corridors; school buildings are hopelessly outmoded, lacking proper heating, ventilating and sanitary facilities; there are not enough playgrounds; more gymnasiums and auditoriums are needed; fire and traffic hazards abound.

Yet there is nothing to be done about it. Again the Budget Bureau has slashed the Commissioners' carefully studied recommendations for school funds, this year by $1,892,000. Yet the District has a budgetary surplus of some $3,000,000.

When public officials complain of the inadequacy of their appropriations, it isn't news. But when spokesmen for 200 associations of taxpayers stand up and protest skimping of expenditures on education there can be no doubt as to the validity of their claims. For they are the ones who must foot the bills. Only the most insistent necessities would stir them into objecting against economy.

The same old story is a bitterly true story. The school plant of the Nation's Capital is far below standard, with the demands on it increasing yearly. Money is needed, money is available, and money is denied. For this Washington can thank a small group of non-residents on Capitol Hill, small as to numbers and especially so as to vision, sense of duty and true patriotism.

Limited Naval Agreement.

The four-power naval conference at London is making progress in spite of the withdrawal of Japan. No doubt the delegations representing the United States, Great Britain, France and Italy have put forth the greater efforts to reach some sort of agreement because of the critical situation caused by Japan's withdrawal. In some degree that attitude may account for the concessions by our Navy Department from its previous stand in favor of 10,000-ton cruisers.

The measure of agreement so far reported is a poor substitute for the Washington and London naval limitation treaties. The four powers have pledged themselves not to build any cruisers of more than 8,000 tons, mounting guns of more than 6.1 inches in caliber, during the next five years. Size and gun-caliber limitations will also be placed on other types of vessel. But there will be no restrictions as to the number of fighting ships any country may build, and it is assumed that escape clauses will be inserted into all provisions of the new agreement, releasing the signatories from obligations if non-signatory countries refuse to abide by the rules thus laid down.

One other important aspect of the proposed agreement is the exchange of naval building programs. On its face this plan merely calls for a trading of information. Actually it will guard against surprise developments in naval building and should have a deterring effect upon useless naval competition.

Success of the agreement will depend almost wholly upon the attitudes of Japan and Germany. Authorization of a parity building program in Tokyo would reduce the agreement at London to a scrap of paper. It should be plain to the Japanese that their government has not escaped the responsibility of preserving the equilibrium of national security by walking out of the London conference.

Germany's position is no less delicate. However, there seems to be some hope of bringing that country into the conference before its work is completed. Berlin's policy of refusing to adhere to any treaty which it has not had a hand in drafting cannot be called unreasonable. A realistic attitude indicated the advisability of inviting Germany to the conference at the beginning. Certainly there is now ample reason to employ all the diplomacy at the command of the conference to avoid a possible upset for want of German adherence.

That "Damned Mass Meeting."

If Representative Blanton had deliberately set out to dramatize the slavish impotence of the District in shaping its own fiscal policies, he could have devised no more effective stunt than his preposterous opposition to the District Medical Society's forthcoming mass meeting. His telephone call to Dr. Ruffin was apparently intended to intimidate the medical society. Actually it serves only to emphasize the incredible dictatorship in financial matters which a few politicians have imposed upon the District.

It is an old though painful story that the District is not permitted to submit its own budget to Congress. More galling than that restriction is the fact that Mr. Blanton has forbidden local authorities to reveal their testimony at his secret hearings on the appropriations bill.

Fearing that such undemocratic tactics may again leave the people of Washington at the mercy of uncontrolled contagion, and with inadequate hospital service, the District Medical Society decided to call to public attention, in a most dignified way, the urgent necessity of expanding the local health budget. For that outstanding public service the society is warned by the chairman of the House sub-committee handling the bill that "there are a lot of Congressmen who refuse to be bulldozed by any damned mass meeting."

This outrageous insult to the Medical Society is a clear and intolerable attempt at terrorization. Local agencies are warned that any effort to secure fair treatment for the disfranchised Capital City may arouse the enmity of those who control the purse strings. Responsible local government under these circumstances is impossible. Is that why Commissioner Allen plans to retire before his term expires and Corporation Counsel Prettyman has announced his resignation?

It is not, of course, this flare-up alone which so arouses the indignation of Washingtonians. Rather it is the success with which a few bigoted backwoods politicians misrepresent the generally reasonable attitude of Congress toward Washington. The House has entrusted study of the local appropriation bill to a legislator who is thoroughly committed to the vicious practice of trying to punish imaginary enemies by withholding funds essential for the public welfare. The result is to demoralize local government to what would be a travesty if it were not so tragic.

The medical society is properly unperturbed by this outburst of adolescent Hitlerism. It will go forward with its meeting of protest against Congressional indifference to the essential health needs of the community. Unless Washington has lost every scintilla of interest in its own welfare, it will back Dr. Ruffin's movement to the utmost, and then move on in a united campaign to free the District from the utterly servile condition which Mr. Blanton seems to think appropriate for the National Capital.

The nilgai, or blue cow, has reached the Field Museum in Chicago. Crossed with a red Devon bull, the result ought to satisfy even Mr. Gelett Burgess.—Hartford Courant.

To Democratic veterans of the 16-day siege in Madison Square Garden in '24, even a week in Philadelphia shouldn't seem any longer.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Broken Promises.

From the Buffalo Evening News.

According to reports from Edmonton, Alberta, angry citizens are thronging the legislative halls of the Canadian province, demanding their $25 a month "or else." Politicians must be painfully affected by the sight, especially those trusting souls who have followed the banner of Premier William Aberhart and his Social Credit Party.

Premier Aberhart is not the first politician to make pledges he cannot keep. The people of Alberta asked for bread and he gave them a stone which is proving exceedingly tough chewing. Six months have passed since the Social Creditors promised to allow every man, woman and child in Alberta $25 a month. The goal is no nearer these enthusiasts than it was the first day Premier Aberhart started to promote the Canadian equivalent of the Townsend plan.

Neutrality And Kellogg Pact.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Apropos the letters of criticism which you have received in regard to your editorial references to the ultimate results of the so-called Nye Committee, I wish to voice my approval of every word you have said and to predict that your position will be thoroughly vindicated by future events.

It is certainly refreshing to note that the editorial policy of The Post is aligned with the thought which is consistently prevalent in the minds of those more practical and realistic of the peace advocates. The goal of the Nye Committee would simply "invert the terms" of what would be the practical pursuit of the object of peace. It is hardly conceivable that this country would ever find itself menaced by such impractical and war-breeding procedure as is now embodied in every step contemplated toward legislation such as is planned by the Nye Committee (after it gets through washing dirty linen and scandal-mongering).

It causes a self-respecting American citizen to bow his head in shame to contemplate the conditions described in your recent editorial, "The Great Betrayal," and further amplified in your January 25 editorial captioned "The Conditions of Peace."

Regardless of the die-hard irreconcilable element the lesson will finally be learned that the only practical route to definite and maintainable peace for the United States and, consequently, for the world, is for the United States to throw off the fetters of nationalistic idiocy, ostrich-like self-complacency and theoretical self-sufficiency to join hands with the League of Nations and take its proper degree of responsibility in helping to police the world against the depredations of would-be aggressors.

The record of the United States on the question of sacredness of treaties is nothing to brag about, witness the Kellogg Pact. If we wished to exhibit good faith in this connection why haven't we broken off diplomatic relations with both Japan and Italy? (and that doesn't mean that we should be fighting either in a military sense). The hypocrisy of our position in this regard is devastating to contemplate. Instead of wasting time on developing so-called "neutrality legislation" why aren't we busy observing sacred treaty provisions? If we wished to be consistent with the spirit of the terms thereof the question of neutrality would "go out the window" because we would not be trading with Italy at all. As it is now, sad to say, we are aiding and abetting a convicted and confirmed aggressor. Shame on us!

ENNIS MONROE NICHOLS.
Washington, Jan. 25.

Third Precinct's Dogs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The signers of the petition to have the Great Dane, "Hamlet," restrained did not complain that he was cross to milkmen, unkind to small children, or that he would bite a friendly human hand when thrust into his mouth. It was not the virtues of Hamlet that caused the petition to be written, but certain of his well-authenticated misdeeds: to wit, three small dogs were severely bitten by him (one of these died from his injuries), and one lady, trying to protect her terrier from Hamlet's attack, was knocked down by the great 170-pound Dane.

The neighborhood knows that, at least, two other little dogs were bitten, but that their owners did not wish to make complaint.

The petitioners do not ask that Hamlet be destroyed, nor even that he be sent away. All that they do ask is protection from further incidents of the kind above mentioned.

In these days we hear much of the "good neighbor" policy in our international relations. Would it not be well, if we could begin at home, and have a bit of the good neighbor policy, in the Third Precinct of the Nation's Capital.

Faith In This Generation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of February 4 the "Observer," writes that he does not believe that this generation would have undertaken the tasks of the Revolutionary War or the Civil War. He believes that rugged and sturdy American manhood no longer exists. He has drawn a contrast between 1775 and 1861, and 1917. Well, I would advise him to pay a visit to the nearest CCC camp. There he will find the finest examples of rugged American manhood, of which he would be proud. A visit also to West Point, or to nearby Annapolis will also enlighten him and inspire confidence in the abilities of young, courageous Americans.

He does not approve of woman suffrage. He believes that woman's place is in the home, and he also believes that woman is incapable and inferior to man in the business world. He is sadly mistaken. Woman suffrage was the beginning of progress toward world peace! Man has had his chance to prove his ability to bring about world peace since civilization began. But what has he done with it? He is too proud to be humiliated to save the lives of others. Now woman has a voice in the National Government! She is becoming prominent in the business world and in the professions, and is proving herself just as competent, and sometimes superior to the men! Woman's place is also in the home, but the time has come for her to step out and take matters into her own hands.

Results Of Prohibition.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of February 8 Mr. C. V. Burnside comments on the "liquor question" as it applies to the District.

The gentleman may be correct when he attributes some of the improved conditions today to the temperance agitations of the last half-century; but he is in error when he holds that any such improvement is due in any way to "the educational and habit-changing effects of prohibition." Any improvements that we have achieved in the last 15 years were not because of prohibition, but in spite of it. The principal educational effects of prohibition were to teach the people the arts of home-brewing and a general disrespect for all law and restraint (the very thing, by the way, of which the gentleman complains as "a modern tragedy").

The principal habit-changing effect of prohibition was to substitute the drinking of more or less poisonous concoctions for the use of good pure liquors. And another effect of prohibition was the building up of an enormous illicit traffic in liquors, which actually became one of the largest industries of our Nation, and which still exists, although, thanks to the repeal of prohibition, it is rapidly dwindling.

The gentleman seems to think that the establishment of lawful liquor stores does not contribute to the advancement of morality. But if these lawful establishments cause the disappearance of an equal number of illicit dealers, are they not contributing to morality?

The Airport And Military Road.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Let us use less ink and more thought and consideration on this airport problem. Washington and Arlington County can have a fine airport at the present location if agitators will cease trying to "feather the nest" of the airport operators at the expense of Arlingtonians.

Military road or a nearby substitute must be continued. No highway in Arlington County is of greater importance to these neighbors of Washington, regardless of statements credited to Government officials by Harris B. Hull in The Sunday Post that "Mount Vernon boulevard and other highways adequately serve this area." A casual glance at a map will disprove this statement; Mount Vernon boulevard is only a direct route to part of Alexandria, isolated from Arlington County by the railroad yards which serve Washington.

All roads in the county must lead to only three direct entrances to the city. Heavy city traffic tends to eliminate entrance over Key Bridge into Georgetown. The approaches to Arlington Memorial Bridge are partially blocked by Arlington Cemetery and Fort Myer. No direct approach to this bridge can exist unless an opening is made through the cemetery. Highway Bridge is served by only three roads, the Riverside boulevard that is isolated from the county, the old road to Alexandria and by the Military road in question.

Military road is the only reasonable approach to the city from part of Clarendon, Lyon Park, and the wide expanses of Virginia Highlands and the Columbia pike sections.

Arlington County's proposal is fair. They ask only that the airport dedicate and build a new road along the south side of the airport in return for the gift of the present road.

The present haste, after ten years, smacks of frame-up. Even if the road is closed to the public, how will safety be fostered so long as the railroad switch to Rosslyn remains on a high embankment at the end of the present runway? Is the haste of the War and Commerce Departments a play into the hands of the airport operators to rush the gift of an infensely valuable right-of-way before public opinion can be crystallized and Congressmen can realize that they are being "duped?"

The Arlington County Civic Federation would offer no opposition to a proposal for the substitution of a new road immediately south of the airport. That is a fair offer for all concerned, any less is robbery.

ARTHUR H. SURPRISE.
Highland Pak, Va., Feb. 9.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Much has been said and published in opposition to the Military road in Arlington County, Virginia. As an active citizen of the county, I have a fair knowledge of safety conditions in the county. There never has been an accident at the Washington Airport caused by Military road. All accidents to airplanes in Arlington County have been caused by inferior construction of planes or motor trouble. Some people have been killed by such accidents; none while crossing Military road.

Furthermore, Military road was established many years ago for the benefit of all the citizens of the Nation who cared to visit Arlington National Cemetery at no cost to them. The Washington Airport was established for profit.

The situation boils down to this: The owners of the Washington Airport, knowing that sooner or later the United States Government or the District of Columbia government will establish a local airport, propaganda favorable to the Government's purchasing this airport has been put out by promoters who will unload this airport on the Government at a profit. They do not consider the convenience of the tax-paying citizens of Virginia who must use Military road or make a long detour if the road is closed.

There is a conveniently located substitute roadway if taken up by the authorities, i. e., the right of way of the Arlington-Fairfax Railway that has been abandoned for use as a railroad, from Clarendon to South Washington through Hatfield at Fort Myer. This roadbed is graded and is much straighter than the Military road, which has many dangerous curves. If the airway authorities are really anxious to prevent accidents on the highway, there is a golden opportunity by taking over this right of way.

Torchlight Politics

Post Office, Wednesday.

We seem to have read recently "how" Mr. Farley or Mr. Fletcher—anyway, somebody who ought to know and whose name begins with the sixth letter of the alphabet—has been predicting that the next Presidential campaign will be "bitter." By this word, we hope, the prophet meant that the autumnal struggle of 1936 will resemble in more respects than one the campaigns of "the good old days."

In the first place, firmly as we oppose bitterness in the abstract, we confess to a low enjoyment of it in the concrete—when we ourselves are safe beyond the sidelines. And we believe the average citizen is, in this respect, no better than we ourselves are.

But, apart from the priceless sport of mud-casting, the ancient battles of the ballot possessed plenty of picturesque elements which really ought to be revived and preserved. Today's effete generation should be persuaded, if not compelled, to follow its fathers, or grandfathers, in their preparations for exercising the inestimable privilege of the franchise—and among these none was more efficient, none more elevating, than the torchlight-parade.

Think of it: Big or little, thousands of towns had each their Republican Club and their Democratic Club, which always paraded two or three times between the first night in October and the night before the first Tuesday following the first Monday in November. Banker and baker, butcher and lawyer, cleric and atheist, the worker and the happy derelict who lived on the charity of the ward-leader; everybody went, on those evenings, to the Club's "headquarters."

Immediately you were handed The Bottle (a generic term, there being a legion of bottles) and you could pour your own, or say thanks you'd take a cigar—and be pressed to "take that, too."

Then you were given a visored cap with "BLAINE AND LOGAN" emblazoned upon its ribbon—or "CLEVELAND AND HENDRICKS."

And then you were offered, and proudly donned, a half-length blue or red oilcloth cape: in those happy days the latter color was not Communistic, there being no Communists—it was merely Democratic.

And then you were armed with a torch: not one of those pale and harmless electric things which you see occasionally, nowadays, in some lodge-parade, but a real coal-oil torch. It always stank; it frequently exploded—but it was guaranteed to flame. The soberest adult bore it as a badge of honor; the small boy who could get one was as happy as he wouldn't be again till Thanksgiving.

Whereupon you marched.

It must have been a splendid thrill. It must have provided all the beauty of the uniform without any of the obligations—all the dignity of the martial spirit with none of its dangers.

* * *

Every house—of Your Party Affiliations—was illuminated (by gas) as you passed by, and the flags were out:

"Eye-e-es—r-r-right!"

All the boys who were too small to parade had built bonfires at the corners: bonfires begun with pungent autumn leaves—whereon, however, were soon heaped wooden boxes from such local stores as had proprietors who shared your own political loves and hatreds.

And all the young girls lined the gutters—and admired.

There was red-fire for everybody, too. And bands? Why, drum corps didn't amount to shucks, in an election parade! There were always both the local Metropolitan and Silver Cornet bands. As like as not there'd be a couple o' bands from place as far off as 10 or 12 miles.

* * *

And, when the bands weren't playing, the tramping ranks would recite:

"Four—four—
Four years more!"

Or else they'd hold the folded yellow Campaign Song-Sheets before their eyes and sing:

"He's all right!
He's all right—
He and Levi P.!"

Sometimes, next morning, you were that hoarse you didn't want to go to school—or business.

Sometimes, too, the other Club—the Club of the rival Party—would so manage its parade that the processions passed each other. What a training in invective! Once in a while, what a school for fisticuffs! . . .

Well, we suppose that, in the months to come, this Column will have to trail along with the rest of the respectables and deplore the mud-slinging of the 1936 Campaign—but we do hope that both National Committees and all State, County and City Committees will allocate lots of money for the revival of the Torchlight Procession, otherwise known as the Election Parade.

Table Warfare.

London, Feb. 11.

AFTER a quiet study of the rules and tools of civilized table warfare your correspondent has decided that the French combine the greatest simplicity with the best results. The object of the game when a man sits down to the table is to put food into his physique, but certain refinements have been introduced since the days when people tore meat with their hands, and the problem is to conduct the sport with a minimum of ritual (sic) and form, but without putting the feet into the trough.

The Frenchman, like the old Scotch golfer, endeavors to do what there is to be done without superfluous weapons or fancy gestures. He sits down, ties his napkin behind his ears, picks up a knife and fork and goes to work with admirable directness. He dunks his bread in the juice of the snail, he chases fragments of steak and gravy with a piece of crust, he licks his fingers, says "Ah!" and gets fed.

He is far too sensible ever to permit a desirable morsel to be carried back to the kitchen out of slavish respect for an arbitrary rule devised by somebody over in England whose ideas of etiquette decreed that a man at the table should never appear to be hungry. If it is too small or too liquid to be played with a fork he will not hesitate to use his knife for a squeegee and wipe the knife on the bread.

That would be comparable to using a putter to play a ball out of a bunker, but the object of golf is to run the ball down the hole, and the Frenchman at his dinner knows only that he, too, wants to achieve the same objective with his groceries.

IT is by no means a sordid spectacle. On the contrary, the Frenchman's enjoyment and the simple skill of his game give your correspondent moments of admiration. He does not require a special niblick to blast the peas out of the mashed potatoes or a tweezer to overcome asparagus.

If a slice of mushroom reposes in a difficult downhill lie on the rim of the plate he doesn't ignore it, as the American or Englishman would, but goes after it and gets it even if he has to play three strokes off the tablecloth, which some of us would consider to be out of bounds. His tools are fewer, but he gets everything out of them and he never picks up, so to speak, rather than try a difficult shot.

The effectation of Americans at table is notorious, and they hamper themselves by local artificial rules having no basis in common sense. They are afraid to dig for the best fragments of chicken or lobster, they avoid the gravy as though it were poison and the last spoonful of soup always goes back to the kitchen, because somebody once made a law that tipping the plate is comparable to teeing up on the fairway.

The Englishman's kit is even more complicated than ours, resembling in the same analogy the sort of bag with which a Sarazen or a Hagen bends the back of a caddy in an open championship. He can't eat berries or a dab of custard without fork and spoon, a trick which spatters dessert all over the ceiling when Americans undertake it, and his rules say it is proper to load the back of the fork with meat and potatoes all the way up to his wrist.

The American, on the contrary, considers that it is bad form to pack food on the hump of the fork, and consequently when they meet at table each regards the other as not much better than a cannibal, thus causing strained relations.

• • • •

IN Italy your correspondent discovered a great variety of styles in the manipulation of spaghetti and finally settled upon the Roman twirl as being the most convenient. Although the Genoese call it vulgar and the people of Milan abominate the Genoese method, the Romans spear a forkful of oily, steaming strands, jab the prods of the fork into the bowl of a soup spoon and twirl vigorously.

The spaghetti quickly winds around the fork like yarn on the spindle of a spinning wheel and is then jammed into the countenance before it can recoil. The Genoese shun the spoon as an unethical implement, contending that any true Italian should be able to twirl his spaghetti in midair without artificial support, but the Milanese stab down through the mass and twirl against the bottom of the plate.

So there are three distinct schools, each claiming to be right and regarding the others as enemies of Italy. But, fortunately, in Italy there are no other problems of the kind which complicate life elsewhere, because after an Italian has had his spaghetti course he merely has some more spaghetti!

Those French, though, are the masters. They avoid no hazards, they take food as it comes without false restrictions on style or stance and they make their vittles holler "Uncle!"

Scientist Believes Redfern Is Alive

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—Recurring reports that Paul Redfern, who disappeared nine years ago on a flight to Brazil, is still alive were given credence today by Dr. Morton C. Kahn, of Cornell University Medical Center, on his return from a scientific expedition to Dutch Guiana.

He said he was told by an Indian hemet far up the Tapanahoni River that Redfern is living in a jungle village in northern Brazil across the border from Dutch Guiana.

Although there is a possibility it might be another white man, Dr. Kahn said he was convinced of the identity of Redfern because all the natives told of a man who fell from the sky. In telling of the incident they invariably made a noise like an airplane motor, he said.

The Lincoln In Manchester

Civil War President Advised By Briton On Neutrality.

Statue In England Recalls Harmony Between Nations.

By Violet K. Libby.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

QUESTIONS of embargoes, the powers of belligerents, the rights and duties of neutrals, and the freedom of the seas have arisen periodically to plague American Presidents. During the Civil War they were the cause of friction which came near to plunging the North into war with England, a disaster which would almost inevitably have altered the whole course of American history.

They might well have brought the Union to grief had it not been for the sound common sense of Abraham Lincoln, backed up by the practical and far-sighted idealism of the British statesman, John Bright. Because these two men had the vision to see beyond the friction and danger of the moment to the larger issues at stake, the statue of Abraham Lincoln stands today, in commemoration of over 100 years of peace between the two countries, in the City of Manchester, the city which claims John Bright as its own.

The difficulties arising out of the cotton embargo and the Trent affair are familiar history. Public opinion in England, egged on by an influential and vociferous press, was largely in sympathy with the South. The embargo on cotton had ruined the Lancashire textile trade, causing inevitable bitterness in the ranks of capital. The seizure of the Southern commissioners, Mason and Slidell, gave pretext for a rupture which was eagerly magnified to the utmost by an already prejudiced and partisan majority. One tactless, undiplomatic move would have been the spark to the tinder. The resulting conflagration could have had nothing but the most disastrous consequences.

• • • •

JOHN BRIGHT, a member of Parliament from Lancashire, from a family itself much interested in cotton mills, had an intense admiration for the American ideals of government. Believing passionately that the Government of the United States rested more than any other on the free choice of a free people, the great liberal had written on a portrait of Abraham Lincoln in his possession: "And if there be on earth and among men any 'divine' right to govern, surely it rests with the ruler so chosen and so appointed."

While tides of feeling were running high, he threw his whole weight on the side of Lincoln, pleading for understanding and sympathy with democratic ideals, and begging the people to uphold rather than to destroy the Union in which he had such hope.

Before a great gathering at Rochdale he outlined his conception of the future of America:

"I should say that if a man had a great heart within him he would rather look forward to the day when, from that point of land which is habitable nearest to the pole, to the shores of the great Gulf, the whole of that vast continent might become one great confederation of States—without a great army and without a great navy, not mixing itself up with the entanglements of European politics, without a customs house inside, through the whole length and breadth of its territory, and with freedom everywhere, equality everywhere, law everywhere, peace everywhere. Such a confederation would afford at least some hope that man is not forsaken of heaven, and that the future of our race may be better than the past."

• • • •

BUT John Bright, intensely anxious to see the American ideals of government preserved, was very much afraid that in the controversy over the Trent matter the United States would let the defense of so-called "national honor" lead her to national destruction.

With a frankness which might have seemed impertinent had it not so obviously been motivated by a sincere concern for the preservation of Anglo-American peace, he took upon himself, through letters addressed to Sumner, but evidently intended for the eye of Lincoln, to counsel the American President to go to any length to avxoid being drawn into a conflict which might imperil the Union.

It would be infinitely better for America to eat "humble pie," he believed, than to run the risks involved in standing on her dignity.

"Don't even hesitate to tell the world that you will concede what two years ago no power would have asked you," he writes on one occasion, "rather than give another nation a pretense for assisting in the breaking up of your country."

On December 5, 1861, he wrote Sumner a letter which was read aloud at a Cabinet meeting: "If I were Minister or President of your country, I would write the most complete answer the case is capable of, and in a friendly and courteous tone, send it to this country. I would say that if, after this, your view of the case is not accepted, you are ready to refer the matter to any sovereign or two sovereigns, or Government of Europe, and you will rejoice to join with the leading European Governments in amendments and modifications of international law in respect to the powers of belligerents and the rights of neutrals.

"I need not tell you, who are much better acquainted with modern history than I am, that Nations drift into wars—often through the want of a resolute hand at some moment early in the quarrel. So now, a courageous stroke, not of arms, but of moral action, may save you and us."

• • • •

WAS the subsequent release of the Southern commissioners the courageous stroke of moral action? At any rate it served the purpose. With the chief pretext for war deftly removed, there was no longer any excuse for the hostile party in Great Britain to lend its aid to the breaking up of the Union.

The teaching of Bright had already made it clear to many, particularly in the North, that the struggle involved far more than the issue of slavery, for when Henry Ward Beecher came to address a huge meeting in the Free Trade Hall of Manchester the chairman pointed out:

"The South had held the reins of government in its hands for a long series of years, until the election of Mr. Lincoln, on the platform of the limitation of the area of slavery, turned the scale. That election was the free and unrestricted voice of the people, and against it the South rebelled. It was therefore a rebellion against constitutional government—an armed resistance to a constitutional ruler; and the issues involved in the struggle are the safety of constitutoinal liberty everywhere—the progress of liberal institutions everywhere—and the development of the Anglo-Saxon civilization everywhere, and therefore it is that we seek to preserve the great Republic from disruption."

BUT what of the textile workers, to whom the cotton embargo was bringing frightful distress? The Cotton Famine, still referred to today in capital letters, had closed hundreds of mills. Thousands of operatives were thrown out of work and were near starvation, but they and their families would not ask the government to end the war by helping the slave owners. To them the chief issue was slavery, and after the Emanicpation Proclamation they sent President Lincoln a message of support.

Lincoln, touched and heartened by the message, replied: "Under the circumstances I cannot but regard your decisive utterances upon the question as an instance of sublime Christian heroism, which has not been surpassed in any age or in any country. It is indeed an energetic and re-inspiring assurance of the inherent power of truth, and the ultimate and universal triumph of justice, humanity and freedom. I do not doubt that the sentiments you have expressed will be sustained by your great nation, and on the other hand I have no hesitation in assuring you that they will excite admiration, esteem and the most reciprocal feelings of friendship among the American people. I hail this interchange of sentiment, therefore, as an augury that, whatever else may happen, whatever misfortune may befall your country or my own, the peace and friendship which now exist between the two nations will be, as it shall be my desire to make them, perpetual."

• • • •

AND so today there stands in front of the old hall in Manchester the Barnard statue of Lincoln, the man, rugged and almost harsh in its simplicity. On it is the inscription:

"This monument of Abraham Lincoln, the work of George Grey Barnard, was through the friendly offices of the Sulgrave Institute and the Anglo-American Society, given to the city of Manchester by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Phelps Taft, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U. S. A., in commemoration of Lancashire's friendship to the cause for which Lincoln lived and died, and of the century of peace among English-speaking peoples."

South Sea Sinews.

IT is tempting to overestimate Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, if only from surprise. There they were, nearly 20 years ago, two young men fresh out of the war and the Lafayette Escadrille, sick to death of it all. "Fuir la-bas!"—they heard the cry of Mallarme—and fled down-under, down to the South Seas of blessed legend. They were, I believe this is the term, "escapists;" they repudiated the cities and noise and jobs and taxes which mark the rest of us. And over the parting the rest of us were very smug. We knew what would happen.

Shades of the early Bougainville and the whalers, Pierre Loti, Stevenson, the pathetic Guaguin! The "mystic isles" of Frederick O'Brien were invincible. You went in, and you never came out. You swooned in idyllic pleasures. Certainly we knew (to take modern Tahiti alone) of the moonlit parties up the Old Broom Road; of the girls with hibiscus blossoms in their hair calling "Iorana" in shy, friendly greeting; of Alex and his Rainbow cocktails on the veranda (is it "lanai" in Tahiti?) of the Yacht Club in Papeete; of all the delights of surf and beach and high, green, dripping mountains and the constancy of blue sky.

We knew all that; we were a little jealous but very smug, very self-righteous. You paid for the South Seas, we were sure, with the sinews of your immortal soul.

• • • •

NOW the delicious, the stunning surprise is that Messrs. Nordhoff and Hall kept their sinews. From Tahiti, in their unique collaboration, came "Falcons of France," "Mutiny on the Bounty," "Men Against the Sea," "Pitcairn's Island,' and now their latest—"The Hurricane' Little Brown—Atlantic Monthly Press, $2.00). To receive any literary work at all from the South Seas must be, one is constrained to say, a wonder. To have it clean-limbed, muscular, active, intelligent and aware is enough to encourage hozannas. But I do not think that Nordhoff and Hall, however sensibly proud they must be of their feat, would have us say more than that they are story-tellers worthy of the grand tradition.

"The Hurricane" is straight story, swift and sure. On the atoll of Manukura, one of those low circles of islets, or "motu," which dot the Paumotus, the Dangerous Archipelago, live 150 Polynesians and four whites—de Laage, the French administrator; his wife; Father Paul, the kindly old Catholic missionary; and the medical officer who tells the tale. Fleeing from a prison in Tahiti toward his homeland, and picked up after a 600-mile voyage in his frail canoe, comes Terangi, as able and sympathetic a portrait of a South Sea native as we have had in fiction. The hero of his people, he and his young wife are kept safely hid from the administrator when the duty obtrudes of sending Terangi back to prison.

There is misunderstanding and conflict between ruler and the ruled, to judge and settle it in cosmic fashion, down upon Manukura sweeps such a hurricane as fell upon the Low Archipelago in 1926—a tornado of wind and water rushing terribly over the low atolls, sweeping trees, houses, and people to sea.

IT clarifies the portraits of the white people, it solves Terangi's fate. But that you must find for yourself. A story like this on a simple plan, clean and sharp in the rising arc of its tension and the drop of its solution, owes much to its structure. Messrs. Nordhoff and Hall have fashioned that well; they have filled in the frame-work with a warmth and wealth of character; and "The Hurricane," sheer story as it is, manages to convey with it a sense of that cleansing, that purging after the force of tragedy, which Aristotle remarked so surely. But that comes after you have read the tale.

However, pleasant the work on the "Bounty" trilogy may have been for the authors, certainly they must have felt its factual basis as something of a crutch, necessary but obtrusive. Now, in "The Hurricane," they have freed themselves, they are on their own. They have even strengthened their sinews in the South Seas.

Ickes, Talmadge on Lincoln

quite clearly was the correction of an outrageous social and economic abuse, Constitution or no Constitution."

Constitution Issue.

"Lincoln did put an end to the enslavement of the bodies of men in this country," Ickes declared, "but the fight to Manumit men, women and children from economic slavery is still far from being won."

Because of the slavery question, he said, the constitution was an "irrepressible political issue" prior to the civil war.

Talmadge's address was principally a recounting of the hardships of Lincoln's early life, his fortitude in overcoming them and a plea that "we emulate his example and not run wild on the dream that the government owes us a living." He declared that Lincoln loved both the North and South.

In introducing Talmadge, Gov. Henry Horner of Illinois said:

"This is, so far as my recollection goes, the first time that a Governor of a State in Dixie has come to Springfield for the express purpose of honoring the name of Lincoln by accepting a place on a Lincoln Anniversary program."

Before the program the two speakers were guests of Gov. Horner for the first time, according to members of his party.

Others who witnessed their meeting said they shook hands perfunctorily and then separated.

Made Condition.

Ickes accepted the invitation to speak on condition that he follow the Georgian, with whom he recently participated in a lively verbal exchange.

The presence of the Southern Governor brought some criticism in the city which prides itself on its Lincoln shrines. Local members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People declared it was "an insult to every colored citizen who cherishes the name of "the Civil War President. Several pro-New Deal Democrats resigned from the club several weeks ago in protest against the invitation to the Governor.

Springfield has declared a city-wide holiday for tomorrow, the first time in years that business houses will remain closed on the anniversary of his birth.

President Roosevelt is sending a wreath to be placed in the Lincoln tomb, a massive granite monument in Oak Ridge Cemetery.

Legion to Hold Rites.

The American Legion again will hold services at the tomb, with National Commander Ray Murphy speaking tomorrow.

The Abraham Lincoln Association, which has a nation-wide membership supporting historical research into Lincoln's life, and the young Republican organization of Illinois also will honor the man, who was born in a Kentucky log cabin and who left Springfield for the White House at the outbreak of the Civil War.

Communists have joined in the groups holding Lincoln birthday meetings in Springfield. Earl Browder, of Kansas, national Communist secretary, was to speak tomorrow night in a public hall, having been denied the use of the high school auditorium, scene of tonight's meeting.

Ickes defended President Roosevelt from charges of dictatorship by drawing a parallel between his chief and Lincoln.

He recalled that Lincoln, too, had been charged with undermining the American Constitution—because he disregarded the charter in freeing the slaves.

The Secretary quoted newspaper articles in 1862 as depicting Lincoln as grasping "in one hand the sword and the purse of the Nation and in the other the legislative and judicial authority • • • to the complete annihilation of our constitutional rights."

"It appears to have been Abraham Lincoln who scuttled the American Constitution, set up a dictatorship, threw the Supreme Court into the Potomac River and declared a moratorium on Congress," the speaker continued.

"In fact, Gen. George B. McClellan ran against him for President in 1864 on a 'Save-the-Constitution' platform."

Finds Critics Similar.

Charges like those gainst Lincoln "though even more vehemently expressed," are being made against the present occupant of the White House, Ickes said.

"It is only when a President has interested himself in the cause of the plain people," the speaker added, "when he is determined to equalize economic opportunities so as to establish a better and happier social order, that the Copperheads, their ancestors and their descendants, secrete an extra supply of venom with which to strike down the man who bravely tilts his lance against special privilege and entrenched greed."

The Georgia executive said Lincoln loved both the North and the South in the struggle of the sixties between the two sections of the Nation.

"In the words of Lincoln," Talmadge said, "'we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow,' his memory, but we can be dedicated, we can be consecrated to our duty to our country in this time of stress and peril and emulate his example, and not run wild on a dream that the Government owes us a living.

"We can go back to the rugged honesty of Abe Lincoln—and it is the only thing on which we can depend to save the country.

"Lincoln knew that government was not made for the specific purpose of taxing the people to the point where they were either paupers or thieves.

"Lincoln knew that patronage was the greatest enemy of all governments.

"Lincoln knew that every citizen had to earn his living to appreciate the government.

"Lincoln is the great example to this country that you must feel anything to know it—that education does not come alone from the books, from colleges and elegance, but from sympathetic experience with your fellow man."

Communities to Aid Stranded Now Are Stranded Themselves

terior Department, headed by Secretary Ickes, but it is doubtful whether Ickes ever was very enthusiastic about the plan. The idea was not his.

In the recent shifting of emergency agencies, homesteads were turned over to Tugwell. His administration has finished 19 of the 20 started by the Interior Department. Thirty-six other somewhat similar projects were turned over to Tugwell by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration headed by Harry L. Hopkins. In all, 51 homestead projects are now occupied by 2,908 families, totaling 15,640 people. Many of them are now included in America's new list of "stranded communities."

Tugwell has a somewhat different idea. His plan is the establishment of agricultural communities, with houses grouped around a "campus" or "common" and with farm land stretching in every direction, land on which the residents, through co-operative efforts, or through individual work, can make a living. These projects differ from resettlement's suburban housing developments in that the residents are expected to make their living entirely from the land, or from the processing of farm products.

The rural communities are tied in with another plan, that of buying up sub-standard land and retiring it from production of cash crops. Many of the occupants of land thus purchased are expected to be moved into the agricultural communities.

Communistic Nature Denied.

Eventually these communities are to be incorporated under State laws, thus making them taxable, the stockholders, who also are the residents of the communities, to share in the expenses and the profits, if any. In addition, the original corporation may set up subsidiary corporations—holding companies?—for the purpose of co-operative wheat farming, chicken farming, dairying, processing, and the like. The corporations, in addition to sharing profits and expenses, would pay weekly wages.

The companies would be financed originally, of course, by the Government. Cost of houses, land, materials, everything, would be included in the original loan. The corporations would pay back the money in 40 years. It is estimated that a payment of about 4½ per cent of the original loan each year would take care of both interest and principal.

Some observers have intimated that the plan is somewhat communistic. Tugwell stoutly denies this.

"The only thing communistic about it is the New England common surrounded by the houses of the community," he said.

Sites for Experiment Secret.

The probable location of these various communities is still a carefully guarded secret. Plans call for from 40 to 60 of them, but their locations will not be revealed until land has been optioned. The Resettlement Administration is guarding against real estate booms in the chosen districts. It is expected that $40,000,000 will be spent within a year on these projects.

It is expected that eventually the agricultural communities will be occupied by 22,000 families, about 11,000 of whom will come from land bought by the Resettlement Administration and retired. The other 11,000 will be families who have come to the end of their economical rope in other communities.

Retirement of 9,300,000 Acres Planned.

Plans for the retirement of land call for purchase by the Government of 9,300,000 acres. This land will be taken completely out of cash crop production and will be used for forestry, parks, recreational areas, wild life refuges and grazing. Already nearly all of this land is under option by the Government at an average cost of from $4 to $4.50 an acre. Eventually the land, according to present plans, is to be turned back to States or to various agencies of the Government for administration.

While Tugwell is taking this land out of production and while Congress is struggling with a bill to allow Secretary Wallace to take some more out of use, the Reclamation Service is putting 100,000 acres of new land into production.

Tomorrow's article will describe the largest of all Resettlement undertakings, the making of loans, and the giving of "guidance" to individual families.

Son Recalls Deeds Of Edison at Fete

Newark, N. J., Feb. 11 (AP).—Thomas A. Edison died before the New Deal came into being, but he predicted in 1930 that new ideas and new methods would be needed to defeat the depression then enveloping the world.

Today was the eighty-ninth anniversary of the great inventor's birth. Men who worked with him observed the occasion with a luncheon in New York and in Newark. His son, Charles Edison, recalled various conversations and deeds of his father which still stand out in his memory.

Now State director of the National Emergency Council, Charles Edison disclosed that his father's expressed belief in the need for experimentation in dealing with the business situation was one of the things which influenced him to enter New Deal activity.

Oust 'Politics' In Air Bureau, Inquiry Urged

Department of Commerce Change Demanded by Senate Agent.

By the Associated Press.

Elimination of "politics" from the Department of Commerce was proposed as a means toward aviation safety yesterday by an investigator for a special Senate aviation committee.

The witness, Charles H. Payne, hired to take a 9,000-mile trip around the country's air lanes, concluded testimony that ground aids to aerial navigation were poor, by shouting:

"Take politics out of the Department of Commerce. It's gambling with human life when politics enters aviation in any form. Perhaps I should say the Department of Commerce is butted into by politicians looking for jobs."

He asked that Commerce Department funds be spent for equipment rather than attempts to develop an "all-concrete, no purpose, $750 airplane."

Gorrell Gives Program.

Payne, a New York flight engineer, took the stand after Col. E. S. Gorrell, chief of the Army's air staff in France during the war and now president of the Air Transportation Association, had proposed a program for development of ground equipment by the Government.

Chairman Copeland (Democrat), New York, of the committee, said "we haven't had the co-operation from the operators we might have had" in the accumulation of material relating to air safety.

Payne, reciting incidents he had observed during his inspection tours, said in one instance a weather observer in the Northwest had gone hunting and left an assistant to note conditions. The substitute, Payne said, forwarded weather observations for five days in advance.

He said unreliable weather reports resulted from the "type of personnel," their "lack of training, laxity and indifference and an almost complete lack of understanding of the requirements of a pilot."

Cites Low Salaries.

He said salaries in some places were from $15 to $35 a month. He recommended observers be put on a merit basis.

Gorrell said the program the industry suggested would cost about $14,000,000. He offered it, he said, with the hope of Government execution to match outlays made by the operators to improve flying equipment.

It would call for "the installation of a concentrated network of weather reporting stations in the vicinity of air terminals," more frequent weather reports, continuance of research and an extension of Government personnel with particular regard to inspection services.

Franklin K. Lane, formerly with the Federal Aviation Commission, said aviation in this country is "six times safer" than in Europe. The Weather Bureau "is not able to take advantage of recent innovations in radio" because men are not allowed to get leave to study, he contended.

Soviet Government In China Is Urged

Leningrad, U. S. S. R., Feb. 11 (AP).—An appeal for the establishment of a Soviet government in China was issued today by the son of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek, virtual dictator of China, who denounced his father as a "traitor."

The letter, from Chiang Chin-Ko, now a Communist living in Leningrad, was published by the newspaper Leningrad Pravda. No date for the letter, written to his mother, was given.

(Chiang Chin-Ko was quoted in 1927 as "renouncing" his father.)

"I appeal to all to defend the country of socialism (the Soviet Union) and fight for the independence of China and for the establishment of power of the Soviets in China," Chiang Chin-Ko said.

E. B. Prettyman Quits to Return To Private Law

Resignation of Corporation Counsel Effective Mar. 15; Here 2 Years.

Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman yesterday submitted his resignation, effective March 15.

On that date he will have completed two years in office. For more than a year he wished to return to private practice.

He will become associated with F. G. Awalt, former first deputy comptroller of the currency, and Thomas Hewes, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Roberts Mentioned.

Among the persons being mentioned as Prettyman's success or are People's Counsel William A. Roberts, Assistant Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal, and Assistant Corporation Counsel Walter Fowler.

None of the District Commissioners, it is understood, has committed himself to any candidate. Commissioner George E. Allen said any prospective appointee would be carefully considered before the job is filled.

Prettyman and his new associates have purchased a house at 822 Connecticut avenue and will maintain a branch office in Hartford, Conn. It is expected they will specialize in bank and income-tax law.

When asked why they had bought the house, Prettyman said he and his partners were going to practice law "in the old-fashioned way."

"We will serve tea every afternoon at 4 and each room will have an open fireplace," he explained.

Succeeded W. W. Bride.

Prettyman was named to succeed the late William W. Bride. This was soon after he had resigned as general counsel of the Internal Revenue Department, when Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau started a policy of naming his own appointees to key positions.

As corporation counsel, Prettyman drafted the magistrate's court bill, which is now pending before Congress. The purpose of the bill is to set up minor courts in precinct stations to alleviate congestion in the Police Court building.

He was also the author of the bill designed to give the District Commissioners veto power over the Board of Education and other quasi-official boards.

High Florida Court Gets Fight for Willy Estate

Tallahassee, Fla., Feb. 11 (AP).—A fight between John N. Willy's daughter and his wife over the late automobile manufacturer's vast estate moved into the Florida Supreme Court today.

Mrs. Florence Dolan Willys brought proceedings to prevent Judge C. E. Chillingworth, of the Palm Beach County Circuit Court, hearing a case in which Virginia Willys Delanda, the daughter, claims her father never was legally married to Mrs. Dolan.

The Supreme Court granted a temporary order, and directed Judge Chillingworth to show by March 3 his authority to proceed with consideration of the daughter's attack upon the marriage.

County Heads Fight Erection Of Laboratory

Montgomery Board Says Station Would Violate Zoning Laws.

Establishment of a U. S. Public Health Service laboratory on the Rockville pike was opposed strenuously in a resolution adopted yesterday by the Montgomery County commissioners.

Pointing out that the Rockville pike section is one of the most beautiful residential sections in the country, the resolution states: "It would be an outrage to violate the zoning regulations in this very desirable and exclusive community."

The commissioners declare that the Maryland National Park and Planning Commission has repeatedly asked the commissioners to preserve the residential character of the pike and that the properties on the pike are assessed at more than $1,200,000. They declared that it took 20 years to get rid of the animal husbandry experimental station in Bethesda and that should this project prove objectionable it likewise would take years to have it removed.

Funds are available for establishment of a laboratory to house white rats, guinea pigs and goats for the experiments. The laboratory would be established on property donated by Luke I. Wilson, financier and philanthropist.

The Federal Government can erect the laboratory even against the wishes of the community, the county government and the State of Maryland provided it has title to the land, under a law enacted a score of years ago by the Maryland General Assembly.

The county commissioners opposed adoption by the State Legislature of any form of consumers' sales tax, alleging that it is a vicious form of taxation and particularly oppressive to border-line communities.

The commissioners will go to Annapolis tomorrow for the joint meeting of the county commissioners of the Western and Eastern Shores of Maryland.

District Engineer E. G. Duncan of the Maryland State Roads Commission was authorized to proceed with removal of snow from county roads.

Byrd Introduces Bill Setting Up Parkway

Bills introduced in the Senate yesterday included one by Senator Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, providing that the lands in the parkway between the Shenandoah and Great Smoky Mountain National Parks shall be known as the "Blue Ridge parkway" and be administered and maintained by the Secretary of the Interior through the National Park Service, according to the Associated Press.

Stars Not So Very Old, Harvard Savant Finds

Cambridge, Mass., Feb. 11 (AP).—Whirlpools of time, identified in star clusters like the Pleiades, near the Milky Way, were described at Harvard Observatory today as showing that the creation of the stars was fairly recent in astronomical time.

Hundreds of these "galactic clusters" have been studied by Dr. Bart T. Bok, assistant professor of astronomy. They all, he reports, show the same thing, that if the mysterious event which created the present heavens had occurred so long ago as widely believed, the clusters would by now have been scattered into individual stars.

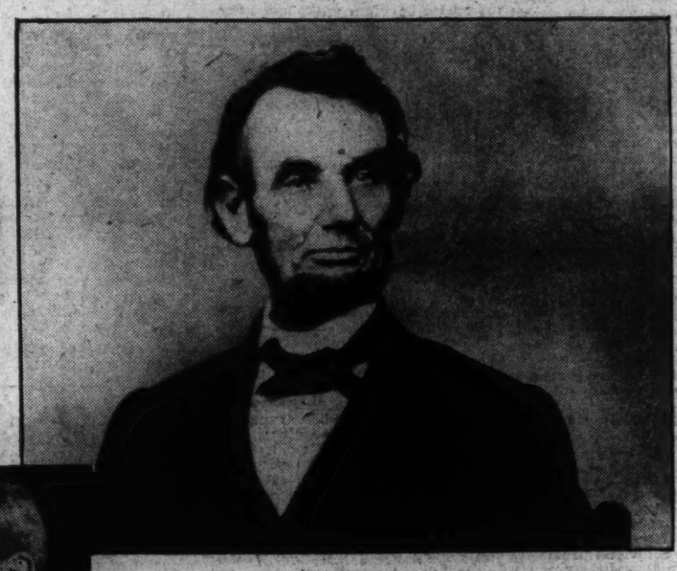
A Lincoln ideal that is Maintained by Chambers Today



A story is related of Lincoln, who, when defending a criminal case, turned to the attorney assisting him, and said, "If you can say anything for the man do it—I can't; if I attempt it the jury will think he's guilty, and convict him." Could a Nation do less than offer its confidence to a man with such passion for truth? It is because we have followed this ideal of Lincoln in our contacts with bereaved families that Chambers conducts most of the funerals in Washington and why we have become "one of the largest undertakers in the world." For example, our metal half-couch casket funeral—including every detail of funeral service—we claim to be without peer for $500, but Chambers' price for the complete funeral is only $265. The same service, use of parlors, cars, hearses and all goes with our $75 funeral.

The Man Whose Father Buried Abraham Lincoln Is Still With Chambers

R. K. HARVEY

Born an undertaker and trained in an atmosphere of Lincoln tradition—kindness to widows and orphan children—Mr. R. K. Harvey is a fine example of the high-class men employed by Chambers.

Funerals of Style Dignity and Character at Small Cost

This beautiful couch casket, as shown above with hearse, cars, embalming, burial case for casket, and all that is furnished with a fine funeral—a $300 funeral service for the small cost of..... $165

This rich looking, half-couch metal casket—one of the best of its kind—with hearse, cars and Chambers' complete funeral service is the same as any that old-time undertakers charge $500. Many other services are included free. You'll agree with thousands of other families served by Chambers, it's a service of beauty, dignity and quality fit for kings. By Chambers for only..... $265

We Believe It Is Our Public Duty to Advertise Truth—Not Hide It

Our experience has taught us that people of Washington want to know the true facts about funeral services. Therefore, we always state our prices plainly; that is why we plainly state in our advertisements what each complete funeral includes, such as cars, hearses, free use of chapels and parlors, paper notices and many personal services free. We believe it is our public duty to give full and complete information and not blanket the facts like old-time undertakers. Chambers serves the greatest number of families, and has for years, by living up to all advertised claims. If we did not do what we promise in this advertisement we would not be permitted to print every word. Consequently, our advertisements are your guarantee of true and reliable statements. Otherwise how could we rise to be one of the largest undertakers in the world.

Modern and Improved Methods.

Chambers always seeks the latest and improved methods of funeral direction. No detail that will expedite or lend added dignity to our complete funerals is too small to be overlooked. All cars, hearses, ambulances and funeral paraphernalia are the very last word in modern and expensive equipment.

How Do We Do It?

Chambers conducts the greatest number of funerals per population than any undertaker in the world, and is "one of the largest undertakers in the world." Naturally we are enabled to buy our merchandise in carload lots. This saving we pass on to our patrons in our power prices. For example, you can get a $300 value, complete funeral at Chambers for only $165.

The Five Tests of a Funeral Home

1..... Is the management progressive?

2..... Is it equipped and appointed as well as Chambers newest branches?

3..... Is it long enough established to stand the test of time? Chambers dates back to horse and buggy days and once had 75 horses used in funerals.

4..... Does its funeral service reflect dignity and good taste? For example, Chambers has a rich funeral suitable for a king for only $265. Also a fine one for $165.

5..... Does it live up to its advertising claims, and give the same service for $75 it would give for $265 as Chambers?

C. U. Plans Rite On Anniversary Of Pope's Rule

Beginning of 15th Year of Pontificate of Pius to Be Observed Today.

The fourteenth anniversary of the coronation of Pope Pius XI will be celebrated at Catholic University this morning with a solemn high mass in the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception.

The Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States, will preside. The celebrant of the mass will be the Right Rev. Mgr. Patrick J. McCormick, acting rector of the university. The sermon will be preached by the Most Rev. John B. Peterson, Bishop of Manchester, N. H.

The chaplains to the apostolic delegate will be the Right Rev. Mgr. David T. O'Dwyer, the Right Rev. Mgr. John A. Ryan and the Right Rev. Mgr. Peter Guilday of the university faculty. The other officers of the mass will be the Rev. Robert Flecksteiner, deacon, and the Rev. Raymond Connolly, sub-deacon. The Rev. Dr. Edward Roelker will be in charge of the ceremonies.

Pope Pius XI, the 260th sucessor of St. Peter, was born at Desto, Italy, May 31, 1857, and was ordained a priest in December, 1879. He was appointed apostolic visitor to Poland in 1918 and raised to the rank of nuncio in 1919 and made a bishop in the same year. On June 16, 1921, he was made cardinal archbishop of Milan and on February 6, following, he was elected Pope. His coronation took place six days later.

Vatican City, Feb. 11 (AP).—War-saddened Pius XI, the "peace loving Pope of missions," was eulogized today by Bishop Ralph Hayes, rector of the American college in Rome, in a declaration calling attention to the beginning of the 15th year of Pius' pontificate tomorrow.

"February 12 marks the commencement of the 15th year of the glorious pontificate of his holiness, Pius XI," said Bishop Hayes, former bishop of Montana. "During the 14 years of his reign by words, works and example Pius XI has commanded the world's esteem and gained a lasting place in the minds and hearts of men.

Rome, Feb. 11 (AP).—The temporal kingdom of Italy and the spiritual empire of the Catholic Church commemorated today the seventh anniversary of their reconciliation.

Premier Mussolini and Pope Pius XI signed February 11, 1929, the Lateran Accord which ended the 59-year "captivity" of the popes.

Post Office Plans New Merit System

The Post Office Department promised its workers "an even break" yesterday in a new "merit" system for balancing their "demerits" with credit for good work.

C. B. Uttley, superintendent of post office service, said the plan would:

Eliminate the human element in rating postal workers for promotion.

Give the worker a chance to wipe out demerits with merits.

Separate demerits from a man's efficiency rating so that one or two "unfortunate incidents" will not ruin a man's chance of promotion.

All black marks against postal workers will be wiped from the books of March 31, and the new system will go into effect, Uttley said. After that, the slate will be wiped clean at the end of every fiscal year.

A man having 500 demerits at the end of a year will still be subject to reduction in pay, and a man having 700 demerits will be subject to removal.

Mexican Bandits Release American

Guadalajara, Mexico, Feb. 11 (AP).—Paul W. Avery, American mining engineer kidnaped by bandits who also carried off Samuel Saneuss, another American, arrived here tonight after his release to arrange for Saneuss' ransom.

Avery was unharmed and said both had been well treated by the kidnapers.

Previously emissaries had been sent to talk to the bandits after Avery's brother-in-law, an American miner named Herivel, had agreed to pay all expenses of a rescue.

Avery said he had been pledged to secrecy and would not disclose where Saneuss was being held. He also refused to divulge how much ransom he had agreed to pay.

It was definitely learned, however, that the kidnap band, which numbered about 40 men, was headed by Candelario Rojas, an insurgent leader.

Husband Given Death In Divorcee's Slaying

Twin Falls, Idaho, Feb. 11 (AP).—Douglas Van Vlack was sentenced today to be hanged at the State Penitentiary at Boise Friday, April 3, for the murder of Mildred Hook, his pretty former wife.

The youth answered only with a shake of his head when District Judge Adam B. Barclay asked if he had anything to say. He evinced no sign of emotion as Judge Barclay ordered his death.

Mildred Hook's body was found near here November 29, three days after Van Vlack had been captured by a posse hunting him for the fatal shooting of State Traffic Officer Fontaine Cooper and Deputy Sheriff Henry C. Givens. The officers were shot when they halted Van Vlack in an effort to arrest him for the abduction of his former wife from a Tacoma, Wash., street.

200 Men Seek Missing Flier In Mountains

Lieut. J. T. Helms Survived Crash Dec. 20, Study of Wreckage Reveals.

By the Associated Press.

March Field, Calif., Feb. 11.—Spurred by indications Lieut. John T. Helms may have survived the crash of his plane six weeks ago, 200 men battled rain and fog tonight in search for a trace of the missing flier.

"I am afraid there is little chance he will be found alive," said his commanding officer, Lieut. Col. John H. Pirie.

But augmenting 100 CCC workers, Col. Pirie dispatched 100 soldiers from March Field to establish a camp in the San Bernardino National Forest, where the wrecked plane was found.

The renewed search was organized after evidence was found today that Lieut. Helms, fiance of Toby Wing, film actress, was alive after the crash the night of December 20.

Col. Pirie said examination of the wreckage—found yesterday a few miles from Cajon Pass, one of the main highways into California from the Southwest—indicated the 27-year-old officer crawled from the plane and walked away.

Officers expressed belief Helms might have fallen down one of the canyons in the region while trying to reach a trail during the night.

Apparently he took with him from the plane his three-day food supplies, water and first-aid kits. He left the smoke candles used for distress signals.

The crash took place apparently about 9 p. m. directly on the course Helms was flying from San Francisco Bay to his post here.

There was gasoline in the plane's tanks, and the fact it did not catch fire suggested he had turned the ignition off. The wreakage was in rough mountain terrain, at an elevation of 4,500 feet.

His unstrapped parachute was found in the pursuit plane's cockpit. There were no bloodstains or other indications he had been seriously hurt.

Col. Pirie said Helms was clothed in an Air Corps service uniform, with heavy winter coat.

Hawaiian King Relics Acquired by Harvard

Cambridge, Mass., Feb. 11 (AP).—Three feather helmets, once the "crown jewels" of native Hawaiian kings, have been acquired by Peabody Museum of Harvard University and were placed on public display today.

With them were four brilliantly colored feather capes and other pieces of native Hawaiian feather work.

The capes and helmets were worn by Hawaiian kings long before Captain Cook visited the islands in 1778.

Board Studies Ship Captain's Disappearance

Republic Skipper Didn't Kill Self, Declare Wife, Officers.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, Feb. 11.—An Army board of inquiry started a secret investigation today into the disappearance of Capt. Edgar S. McLellan from the transport Republic.

The Army board, headed by Brig. Gen. James A. Woodruff of the Fort Mason transport station, announced its findings will be sent to Washington. Names of witnesses before the board were not revealed.

Meantime, high Army officers in Washington and acquaintances here of the 60-year-old ship commander said they did not believe he would have left his transport voluntarily.

"It was not suicide," insisted Mrs. Louise de Pue McLellan, his wife.

Capt. McClellan disappeared from the transport yesterday as it neared this port from Honolulu, carrying the bodies of six Army aviators killed in Hawaii and of Father Damien, Belgium "martyr" priest of the Molokai leper colony.

Capt. McLellan vanished from the transport after appearing on the bridge in pajamas when the vessel was about 30 miles from the Golden Gate. He left instructions he wished to be called when the vessel reached the San Francisco lightship, 7 miles out. His disappearance was discovered by the steward sent to call him. He had been in the Army transport service since 1910.

Army Air Maneuvers Marred by 2 Crack-ups

Concord, N. H., Feb. 11 (AP).—Two crack-ups marred the Army's winter air maneuvers today.

Second Lieut. Gilmore V. Minnis suffered minor cuts and bruises when he overshot the Burlington, Vt., field after a two-hour flight in numbing cold and landed his pursuit plane in a snowbank.

The other accident came when Second Lieut. David G. Desmond nosed his ship into a Burlington snowbank while taking off on a dawn patrol. He escaped injury.

Both accidents occurred as the Army's twentieth pursuit group from Barksdale Field, Louisiana, unsuccessfully attempted to ward off an attack by planes from the Concord base.

Reserve Board Advisory Unit Closes Session

W. W. Smith Reelected as President; no Official Action Taken.

By the Associated Press.

An official Federal Reserve Board spokesman reported last night that the Federal Advisory Council adjourned its initial 1936 meeting here without making recommendations or taking official steps of any kind.

The council, consisting of one representative from each of the 12 Federal Reserve Districts, paid a social visit to the board to meet new members.

The same spokesman said the council had not discussed the problem of curbing possible credit inflation or brought this matter before the board of governors.

The powers of the advisory council are limited to the voice of suggestion. It can make recommendations, but its authority ends at that point.

The council re-elected Walter W. Smith, of St. Louis, as president, and Howard A. Loeb of Philadelphia, as vice president. Walter Lichtenstein, of Chicago, was reappointed secretary.

Other members of the council: Thomas W. Steele, New Haven, Conn.; James H. Perkins, New York; Arthur E. Braun, Pittsburgh; Charles M. Gohen, Huntington, W. Va.; H. Lane Young, Atlanta; Edward E. Brown, Chicago; Theodore Wold, Minneapolis; W. T. Kemper, Kansas City; Joseph H. Frost, San Antonio, and M. A. Arnold, Seattle.

WAS IT MURDER?

By James Hilton

Author of "Goodbye, Mr. Chips" and "Lost Horizon."

Colin Revell, young writer, temporary secretary to Robert Rosewarre, headmaster at Oakington School, is interested in the mysterious deaths of the Marshall brothers, pupils at the school. He and Guthrie, Scotland Yard detective, suspect that the boys were killed by Ellington, one of the masters, cousin of the boys and heir to their fortune. But when Lambourne, another master at the school, is found dead, Rosamund, Ellington's wife, tells Revell and Guthrie that Lambourne confessed to her that he killed the boys to cast suspicion on her husband, whom he hated. They decide that Lambourne killed himself to escape a murder charge, but caution her not to tell of this confession, and the world thinks the schoolmaster died of an accidental overdose of veronal. Revell becomes infatuated with Rosamund, but she puts him off. He writes to Guthrie asking him the whereabouts of Wilbraham Marshall's bathrobe, found beside his dead body in the empty swimming pool.

CHAPTER XXVII.

REVELL HAD JUST SIGNED the letter and sealed it in an addressed envelope when Mrs. Ellington chanced to call with a few books that he had lent her from time to time.

He invited her to sit down, but she declined. "Really, no, I mustn't stay—it's too late. And, besides, you're busy." She approached his desk and looked over his shoulder. "What—a letter to Mr. Guthrie?" Her exclamation of astonishment gratified him, though, as a matter of fact, he would rather she had not known about the letter. "Colin—do you mean—does this mean—that at last—at last—you've discovered who did it?"

He swung round and faced her startled eyes. "Not, perhaps, all that, Rosamund," he answere, but with a triumph he could not disguise. "All the same ,things are coming to a bit of a climax. My letter to Guthrie may—if I'm lucky—round off the whole thing."

They chatted on for a time, more intimately than since the night of the concert, till at last, with the chiming of the School clock, she exclaimed: "Oh, how thoughtless I've been—I've made you miss the post with that important letter! Really, Colin, I'm ever so sorry! Do forgive me!"

He had missed it right enough; the last collection from the village postoffice was made at 10:15, and it had just chimed the half-hour. A pity; it would mean perhaps a day's delay, and a day that could ill be spared.

Suddenly, standing near the window, she stepped back with a startled exclamation. "Oh, Colin, I must hurry back. I've just seen Tom at the front door and he looked up and saw me here. Isn't it awful to have to run away like a guilty schoolboy? But I must. So good night."

It was getting on for 11, but he was too excited for sleep; the dressing gown clew and her visit to him had combined to fill his mind with surging anticipations. What, he speculated, would happen to her after her husband's arrest? How would she take it? Was there anywhere she could go, or anyone who would look after her?

Terror at Window.

Shortly after midnight he left the easy chair and uncovered his typewriter at the desk in front of the window. He would, he declared, compose a stanza of his epic before going to bed. And the stanza, naturally enough, would be about his hero's affair with a pretty woman unfortunately married to a man as nearly as possible like Ellington. This woman, as nearly as possible like Mrs. Ellington, had just had a clandestine meeting with her lover (a youth as nearly as possible like Revell).

He pondered, with his fingers poised above the typewriter keys. Then suddenly, facing him from the uncurtained window as he looked up, he saw something that made his heart miss a beat and the blood tingle sharply through the veins of his body.

It was, or appeared to be, the barrel of a revolver placed right up against the outside of the window pane and pointing directly at his eyes. It was at the right-hand side of the pane, close up to the wooden window frame, and it was impossible in the darkness to see how it was fixed or held in position. Revell, at the first instant of seeing it, had stared incredulously; he half thought himself dreaming. Then, as his wits returned to him more completely, he jerked his chair backward and stood up; and at that moment, with his eyes still fixed upon it, the strange phenomenon disappeared.

Quickly, with sharpening determination to discover what, if anything, had happened, he went to the window and threw it wide open. There was nothing to be seen except the black and starless night. With a growing perception that every second counted, Revell dashed into the corridor.

First he turned to the left, into the dark and empty dormitory. He pressed the switch that should have illuminated it, but no light appeared. The same old trick of the broken fuse. It was natural, perhaps, that he should think so at first, but he remembered, a second later, that Bromley had been in the dormitories during the day removing all the globes and shades for a terminal clean. He heard a sharp movement at the doorway where he had entered and a rush of footsteps along the corridor past his room.

Revell Chases Assailant.

He raced back; his blood was up. The revolver at the window now became an indisputable fact, for he had heard the assailant escaping. Revell chased wildly after him, oblivious of the probability that the fellow still had his revolver with him. At the landing where the stairs led down to the lower floors, Revell halted; it seemed likely that the fugitive had taken the obvious line of escape. But then, in the almost total darkness to which his eyes were becoming accustomed, he noticed that the small door, usually closed and locked, which admitted to the stairs leading up to the disused sick rooms, was very slightly ajar. Revell, listening with his ear to the opening, fancied he heard faint sounds above; that settled it; he pushed the door wide open and began to climb.

At the top of the stairs he found himself panting for breath. Then, almost as if Providence had given him a sign, he heard a faint sound along the corridor to the right.

But now the need for caution began to occur to him. He was in total darkness. He had no flashlight or weapon; the pursued might at any moment turn the beam of a torch upon him and fire. It was not a pleasant thought that somewhere in the darkness a few yards away from him a person, possibly a homicidal maniac, crouched in a corner knowing that he had been traced at last. The danger of people who have already committed several murders is that nothing very much worse can happen to them if they are convicted of an extra one. Revell realized this, and the implication was by no means comforting. He was just preparing for a cautious downward retreat when something happened that stiffened every hair of his head. It was a sound from below like the careful closing of a door.

Trapped? It looked as if he might be, anyhow, and he silently cursed himself for having been such a reckless fool. Meanwhile, he was enveloped by a feeling of slow paralysis, and as he stood there with his back pressed against the wall he knew well enough that he was in deadliest fear as well as danger. The joists still creaked along the corridor to the right—was it only his imagination that made the sound of the creaking seem nearer? But there was something even more horrible to come, for a few seconds later he heard a faint but perfectly identifiable sound from below—the tap of a footstep climbing the stairs.

He licked the perspiration as it streamed down over his lips. What could he do, trapped between an enfilading terror on the right and an ascending one from below?

The footsteps on the stairs were climbing toward him. He was certain of it, though he felt rather than heard their approach. They were soft, stealthy footsteps, creeping up toward him through the blackness. He was sure that in another moment he would either turn sick or scream at the top of his voice or else hurl himself desperately downward against whatever horror might be ascending. All he did, however, was to close his eyes as if to shut out the very perception of darkness. The footsteps were quite near to him now; whatever belonged to them could not be more than a few yards away. Yet still no light. Then, to his utmost horror, he felt a hand reaching out of the darkness and cautiously roving over his hand, his arm, his shoulder, his neck. He opened his mouth to scream but the hand suddenly closed over it, while a hoarse voice whispered in his ear: "Follow me down, you fool, and for God's sake be quiet!"

Human Health Depends on All Parts of Body

Every Organ or Structure Linked to Others in Blood System.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

THE more we know about the human body the more we marvel at the dependence of every organ or structure upon every other. For example, each cell must receive nourishment through an intricate system of tubes transporting blood—the circulation. If the blood supply flags, cells degenerate or die.

We recognize, also, that this vital fluid is a complex affair; that is, it contains many types of cells which have definite functions. These cells may become diseased or show evidences of failing in one respect or another, so that they cannot perform their proper duties. If there are too few red cells or if the red cells are deformed or unripe, as we say, something may be wrong in the blood forming depots—the bone marrow.

Seek to Destroy Germs.

When infection exists the white cells of the blood will collect at the site of the attack and will endeavor to destroy the bacteria. Some of these cells are called granulocytes—the word meaning a cell (cyte) that contains granules. These granules are easily seen under the microscope, because they will absorb certain dyes and may be colored red or blue.

Numerous reports have appeared describing a disease known as granulocytopenia. This names implies too few granule bearing white cells in the blood. The condition is often associated with the use of certain drugs, such as amidopyrine (pyramidon), and some other coal tar products. It has been known for some time that benzene, which is obtained by distilling coal, causes a lowering in the number of granulocytes without affecting the red blood cells, although if this substance is taken in large quantities these latter cells are damaged. Inasmuch as the coal tar products employed in medicine are all derived from benzene, this chemical and its compounds may be poisonous to certain individuals.

Small Fraction Poisoned.

Within the last few years about 40 reports have been published indicting drugs containing amidopyrine as the cause of severe illness. It is admitted, however, that the total of those who show signs of poisoning is but a tiny fraction of that great group who may use this drug.

The case is reported of a physician who had employed a barbituric acid compound (a derivative of coal tar) for insomnia. Two attacks of the blood disease in question (granulocytopenia) were followed by recovery. The drug was omitted entirely and ten months of normal health ensued. As a matter of experiment a single five-grain tablet of amidopyrine was then taken. Within three hours there was marked aching of the bones, a feeling of intense fatigue, temperature of 102 degrees F., and a rapid drop in the number of white cells. Six days later the cells had returned to normal and all symptoms of illness had disappeared.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I have been going with a man for seven years. Marriage has been discussed but no date ever set. His reason, so he says, is that he cannot afford it. I do know when he started in business he had to borrow money and that he now has several other large notes to pay off. He says when we get married he doesn't want to have me fussing because we do not have enough money for the things we want to do. He believes lack of money is the main reason for so many divorces, of which he does not approve.

• • • •

Yet there are times when he does things which make me feel as though this might not be the real reason for our not getting married. To start with, I am a very jealous person—so he says; other people say I am not. One night last week some close friends of his gave a party and asked him. He told me he wouldn't be able to see me that night as he had to work. Later I found out he went to this party. He said he did not tell me because he knew I would fuss, and I shouldn't care about his going, since he wasn't with any one girl, and the only reason he went was because he felt it his duty to go. Those people know me and I feel quite hurt because they didn't ask me. My friends seem to think it would have been only proper to have invited me. Of course, this may be childishness on my part.

• • • •

Before we started going together he went with another girl who has since been married and divorced, but continues to write him. I know he doesn't write her regularly, but he did send her a card at Christmas and since then has received a letter from her which he didn't tell me about. Do you think he should have? He tells me he doesn't care for her in any way, but she always writes and sends him a gift on his birthdays. When she does he says it is only polite that he should thank her. I say he should return her gifts.

• • • •

I must say, though, that he comes to see me almost every night when he doesn't have to work. And except for things like the above which happen once in a while he is most kind and thoughtful. He is 36 and I am 24 years old. I am looking forward to any advice you can give me. Thanking you, I am, M. L.

Direction of the Wind.

DEAR M. L.: It sounds to me as if your friend hasn't made up his mind he wants to marry you, rather than that he can't afford to marry. And since after seven years' courtship he still doesn't know what he wants to do about it all I believe you may go on the assumption that his ardor is diminishing. His willingness to accept invitations which pointedly exclude you, his petty deceptions, his left-handed encouragement of his divorcee friend's attentions, all show which way the wind is blowing—and it is not in the direction of marriage to you.

• • • •

The fact that he comes to see you almost every night when he isn't working is not indisputable evidence of his serious intentions. For one thing, he may come regularly simply because he has acquired the habit, and habit is hard to break; for another, he may in a measure be following the path of least resistance—by which I mean to say, when forced to choose between calling on you regularly or creating a quarrel if he doesn't, he may elect the former as the lesser of two evils; and he may find you amusing, flattering to his ego and generally companionable, and still have no real desire to marry you.

My advice to you is to cut down on the amount of time you've been giving him. See him a couple of nights a week and no more. Throw him on his own resources for amusing himself. Let him go with other women. If he really loves you, the more he sees other women the keener will be his realization of the fact that you are the Only One. If he doesn't love you, it is time for both of you to face the truth.

Start the new program immediately and be candid about your reasons for so doing. If he suspects you of stalling; of concealing an interest in some other man; of being secretly fed up with the association yourself, so much the better. That may be just the incentive required to spur him into a prompt proposal. But if he seems relieved and pleased to receive his walking papers, you might as well forget him as quickly as possible. At 24 you're quite young enough to find yourself lots of other nice beaux. And seven years is entirely too long to wait for any suitor to press his suit.

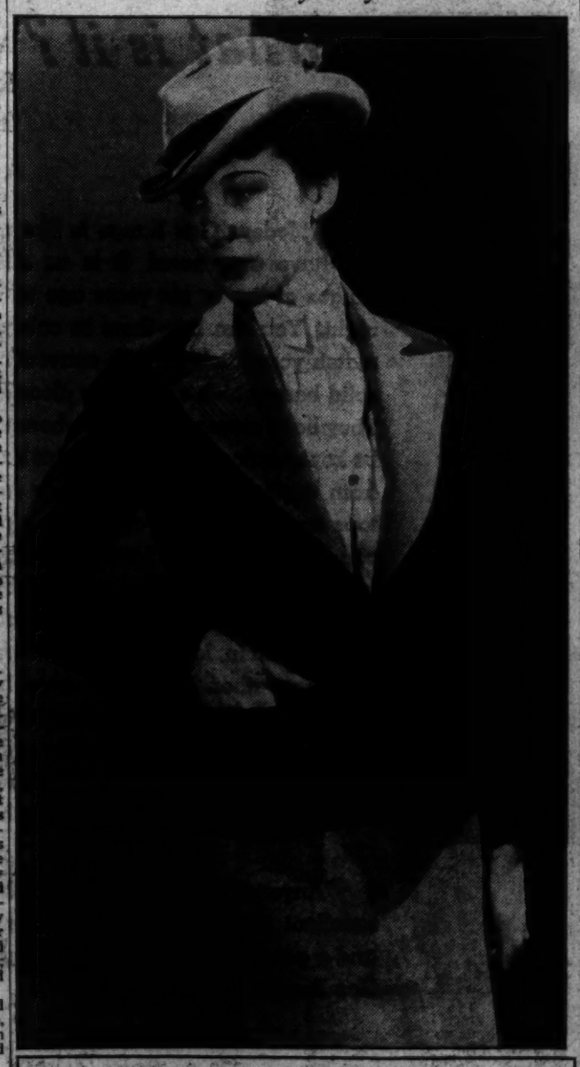
Suit Gives Jaunty Boyish Effect



IT'S TO BE A SEASON of suits, say stylists—suits more mannish than ever and in a greater variety of fabrics. Here is one (pictured above) that literally shrieks with chic. The skirt is a sunlit tan. The coat, a gingerly brown with stitched lapels, tan to match the skirt. Note the dashing cut and extreme width of the lapels. It's a smart suit for $16.95. The tan and brown—and becoming—Homburg hat is $3.95. For further details, call or write Frances Mangum, The Post Fashion Editor, National 4200, Extension 323.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

"WHILE the boys were at the demolishing age, we didn't try to do much about the dining room furnishings," explained the mother of a high school trio. "But now they have started taking baths without being made to, and otherwise behaving in a very civilized fashion—to our own surprise and delight. Anyway, now we are refurnishing the dining room and would appreciate ideas for making it a pleasant, interesting room. Would you suggest an arrangement of the furniture that won't be too stereotyped?"

Those boys are probably stepping out a lot with their gangs, their teams and their troops. Anyway we suggest here a dining room with a big family table and chairs (5, 6) placed not in the center of the room with the buffet (4) and the china. Then under the wide windows place cabinet (7) against adjoining walls, a pair of easy chairs (1, 3) facing each other with a small occasional table (2) between.

This is where the "old folks" don't worry (that's what the high-school generation considers you even if you are in your thrilling thirties) can have a game of cards or even eat when the boys aren't home. After all, a lady and her husband can still enjoy a twosome even if they are the parents of three.

What the Well-Dressed Woman Wore Before 1860

Colonial Dames Sponsor Exhibit Of Early American Costumes

Feminine Finery of Period Between 1750 and 1860 Was Designed for Comfort, Utility and Beauty; Style Show of Past Shows Gowns of Many Noted Women.

PROOF OUR FEMININE forebears planned their plumage with an eye to both usefulness and beauty is revealed in a current exhibit at Dumbarton House, headquarters of the National Society of Colonial Dames of America, at 2715 Q street.

On the second floor of that historic mansion, is a style show telling more than any printed page about feminine fashions in America before 1860. Any day from now to the end of March, from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m., week days, and 2 to 5 Sundays, Miss 1936 can visit the display and discover what her great-grandmother and her great-great-grandmother (and even another, one more "great" removed) either wore or wanted to wear back in the Colonial days.

The gowns cover a period of more than a hundred years—the oldest dating about 1750, the newest about 1860—but all have full skirts, high waistlines and tight bodices. And all are designed for comfort as well as for style.

One of the most interesting dresses in the exhibit is of flowered material combined with lace and white muslin. Made in London and worn about 1750, this gown belonged to Sally Fairfax, friend of George Washington. It was lent to the exhibit by Mrs. Fairfax Harrison.

Colonial Evening Gowns.

There are also two attractive dresses worn by Dolly Madison and now owned by Mrs. Robert Lovett, of Boston. One is of white cotton, cut in empire style and heavily embroidered in colored thread, shot with gold. The other is dove-colored satin with a white embroidered collar.

A gown that is attracting much favorable attention is made of bayadere silk, in soft shades of green and cream-colored stripes, trimmed with wide silk fringe. It is of the period around 1830 and belongs to Mrs. James C. Pilling.

Arinthia Parker, of Virginia, must have looked lovely when she attended a ball given for Gen. Lafayette in 1824. She wore one of the daintiest frocks in the exhibit, a dusty pink dress of woolen muslin trimmed with ruffles and embroidery and held in at the waist with a pink satin sash.

Another striking evening gown belonged to Rebecca Holmes, daughter of Nathaniel Holmes of Boston Tea Party fame. The young lady obviously knew how to choose feminine finery. This sample from her wardrobe is of red moire topped by a wide lace bertha.

A green quilted evening cloak that belonged to Martha Washington is displayed in a case which also contains an embroidered mull dress ordered from India by Gen. Washington for his wife, a white satin wedding dress, a "second-day dress" (to be worn on the day after the wedding), embroidered hose and handkerchiefs the size of dinner napkins.

Accessories Shown.

The exhibit does more than reveal what women wore back in the early days of America. It throws light on customs of colonial days and points up some of the foibles of women in the times when fainting and flirting were the two leading feminine arts.

There are many beautiful fans—ivory, lace and paper—that women might well have used to hide blushes. There are vinaigrettes, of every size and description, carried to keep smelling salts handy. Instead of vanity cases, women in those days had tortoise-shell coin purses, silver and china patch boxes, and dainty bouquet holders of jeweled silver or gold. Card cases had a place in every lady's belongings, as did decorative comb and fan boxes.

Judging from the gloves, slippers and beaded bags on display, accessories were as important then as they are now. There are wedding gloves of embroidered kid and white and bronze wedding slippers resembling slippers ballet dancers wear today. Some of the most attractive and colorful bags were beaded about 1800 and now belong to Mrs. Frank Simonds.

One of the high lights of the exhibit is a calash, a lady's hood supported by hoops, designed to sit on the shoulders and to pull out like an accordion to project over the face and protect a colonial lady's coiffure when she went out in the evening. It is of cream muslin stretched over reed hoops and belongs to Mrs. Stephen Bonsa.

Paris Dietician Warns Women Not to Overeat

Red Noses, Spotty Faces, Yellow Complexions Cited as Penalties.

PARIS (U.P.).—The pleasures of the table are many, and one of them—eating without restriction—is causing many women to spoil their good looks.

This view is expressed by a French dietician in a recent article on "What Women Should Eat," which has aroused great interest in the Paris press.

"Most of the red noses, spotty faces and yellow complexions which women have these days are caused by excess at the table," he writes. "Cosmetics are wonderful aids to beauty, but their effect is considerably reduced if a woman overindulges at mealtime."

He adds that if women do not want "their mirrors" to reveal a jaded digestion, they should eat little and eat well. This, he says, should be regarded by them as their most important rule of conduct in this respect.

Sex Appeal at Stake.

"Modern conditions," continues the article, "are such that women must sacrifice their tendency toward gourmandizing for the sake of sex appeal.

"To avoid overeating is the first and simplest aid to beauty. Another important safeguard is the eating of plenty of green vegetables, because they contain vitality conveyed directly by the sun. Many of the dishes favored by women and regarded as necessities, actually undermine their beauty. I regard obesity as a malady resulting from lack of attention in regard to food."

The views of the dietician are warmly supported by a number of beauty experts. One expert, commenting on this article, said:

"In my opinion, French women, in particular, overeat to a very great extent. The result is seen in puffy faces and weary eyes, and our task of keeping them young and beautiful is enormously increased. It is time that women paid full attention to the nutritive quality of food rather than to the quantity."

Nerve Strain Often Causes Baby to Fret

Routine Should Never Be Upset, Expert Declares.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

THE BABY was fretful and consequently his mother was worried. She felt sure that he was sick, took his temperature and called the doctor. The doctor, however, gave the child a clean bill of health. He forgot to ask what kind of a life the baby had lived yesterday and the day before. Had he done so, he might have guessed the reason for the baby's fretfulness. It was frazzled nerves.

For two days routine had been badly broken up. The early morning feedings had been delayed, necessitating a change in the daily program. The time for his airing had been changed, there had been bustle and confusion in the house, owing to the coming and going of visitors, all of whom had wanted a peep at the baby.

During most of the six months, the baby had led a quiet, uneventful life, and though he seemed calm and indifferent to the excitement, his nerves were actually under a severe strain. Of course the strain showed in his fractious behavior for some days after.

Routine is essential in a tiny baby's life, and he suffers from any infraction of it. He is still a little animal, only partly conscious, and reacts to outside stimuli with the regularity of a machine. If he is used to a quiet life, bustle and confusion disturb him. Possibly a baby who was brought up in a three-ring circus would object to the uneventful days of a well regulated home.

Stout Women's Sizes Offered In Shop Here

Slenderizing Dresses Featured; Soap Animals and Other Items.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

VENUS may have been a gorgeous goddess in her day but the modern man would call her more than pleasingly plump. She would have found herself embarrassed in the misses' departments, humiliated in the woman's, and, in fact, reduced to tears for a well-fitting wardrobe, unless by chance she discovered a certain little shop that specializes in her sizes. Even the fat lady in the circus can be fitted here.

This shop has lingerie, silk and cotton dresses, and coats, uniforms, and foundation garments. Hosiery ranges in price from 29 cents to $1.19, dresses from $3.98 to $27.50. Coats from $9.98 to $49.50, lingerie from 49 cents to $.98.

And best of all, the coats and dresses are designed not only to fit but to flatter. Not one among them that doesn't do things in a slenderizing way.

Animals in Soap.

FRANK BUCK, in one of his leisure moments, when he wasn't scouring the jungles for wild beasts, played a trick or two on soap. He took it into captivity, made it into rhinos, tigers and monkeys and then caged it in little pastboard boxes, reproductions of the bamboo and wooden cages used for real animals.

Naturally these Frank Buck soaps delight the very young lads and lassies. And they please their parents, too, since they are an excellent quality of castile.

Ruling the Waves.

MANY A MAN rebels at the wayward wave of his hair. Painstakingly he takes soap and water and plasters the hair close to his head. Hopefully he turns to greases, and awakens with a silent prayer that these will rule the waves. Week after week, month after month he tries this, that, and the others. Finally he investigates the contents of a little box which he finds on his wife's dresser.

At first he thinks it's soap, but he's noticed his wife using it on her hair after shampoos. He might have noticed how glossy smooth it makes her hair, and how easy to arrange. At any rate he tries it. It's a solidified brilliantine, with an almost imperceptible lavender scent. He rubs a little of the cake on his hands, and thence to his hair. Delight of delights! It works. The wave is but a gentle undulation.

Costume Ball Set for Feb. 19

Mr. and Mrs. Anadale Are Among Those Taking Boxes for Fete.

"Dutch treat" parties, as in the manner of bygone days, are being arranged by members of the younger set in the Capital City for the rapidly approaching Gay Nineties Costume Ball which will take place February 19 at 10 o'clock at the Hotel Willard, for the benefit of the regatta fund now being raised by the President's Cup Regatta Association through its committee of sponsors.

Many debuntantes will organize groups to attend and it is expected many will delve into the mysteries of dances of those days when the polka, the schottische and the old time waltz flourished, especially for this occasion. The orchestra will play the old-fashioned music upon request.

Among those who have taken boxes for the party are Mr. and Mrs. John A. Anadale, Mr. and Mrs. Moncure Berg, Dr. Edith Seville Coale, Mr. Arthur Clarendon Smith, Mr. Charles A. Cochrane, Mr. Curtis Hodges, Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Ingling, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Shelton, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Eric Greenleaf, Mr. Frank Whitman, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Lodge and Dr. Cecil Bagley, of Baltimore, commodore of the Maryland Yacht Club, who will entertain a party of Baltimoreans in his box at the ball.

WAS IT MURDER?

By James Hilton

Author of "Goodbye, Mr. Chips" and "Lost Horizon."

Colin Revell, young writer, temporary secretary to Robert Rosevere, headmaster at Oakington School, is interested in the mysterious deaths of the Marshall brothers, pupils at the school. He and Guthrie, Scotland Yard detective, suspect that the boys were killed by Ellington, one of the masters, cousin of the boys and heir to their fortune. But when Lambourne, another master at the school, is found dead, Rosamund, Ellington's wife, tells Revell and Guthrie that Lambourne confessed to her that he killed the boys to cast suspicion on her husband, whom he hated. They decide that Lambourne killed himself to escape a murder charge, but caution her not to tell of this confession, and the world thinks the schoolmaster died of an accidental overdose of veronal. Revell becomes infatuated with Rosamund, but she puts him off. He writes to Guthrie asking him the whereabouts of Wilbraham Marshall's bathrobe, found beside his dead body in the empty swimming pool.

CHAPTER XXVII.

REVELL HAD JUST SIGNED the letter and sealed it in an addressed envelope when Mrs. Ellington chanced to call with a few books that he had lent her from time to time.

He invited her to sit down, but she declined. "Really, no, I mustn't stay—it's too late. And, besides, you're busy." She approached his desk and looked over his shoulder. "What—a letter to Mr. Guthrie?" Her exclamation of astonishment gratified him, though, as a matter of fact, he would rather she had not known about the letter. "Colin—do you mean—does this mean—that at last—at last—you've discovered who did it?"

He swung round and faced her startled eyes. "Not, perhaps, all that, Rosamund," he answere, but with a triumph he could not disguise. "All the same ,things are coming to a bit of a climax. My letter to Guthrie may—if I'm lucky—round off the whole thing."

They chatted on for a time, more intimately than since the night of the concert, till at last, with the chiming of the School clock, she exclaimed: "Oh, how thoughtless I've been—I've made you miss the post with that important letter! Really, Colin, I'm ever so sorry! Do forgive me!"

He had missed it right enough; the last collection from the village postoffice was made at 10:15, and it had just chimed the half-hour. A pity; it would mean perhaps a day's delay, and a day that could ill be spared.

Suddenly, standing near the window, she stepped back with a startled exclamation. "Oh, Colin, I must hurry back. I've just seen Tom at the front door and he looked up and saw me here. Isn't it awful to have to run away like a guilty schoolboy? But I must. So good night."

It was getting on for 11, but he was too excited for sleep; the dressing gown clew and her visit to him had combined to fill his mind with surging anticipations. What, he speculated, would happen to her after her husband's arrest? How would she take it? Was there anywhere she could go, or anyone who would look after her?

Terror at Window.

Shortly after midnight he left the easy chair and uncovered his typewriter at the desk in front of the window. He would, he declared, compose a stanza of his epic before going to bed. And the stanza, naturally enough, would be about his hero's affair with a pretty woman unfortunately married to a man as nearly as possible like Ellington. This woman, as nearly as possible like Mrs. Ellington, had just had a clandestine meeting with her lover (a youth as nearly as possible like Revell).

He pondered, with his fingers poised above the typewriter keys. Then suddenly, facing him from the uncurtained window as he looked up, he saw something that made his heart miss a beat and the blood tingle sharply through the veins of his body.

It was, or appeared to be, the barrel of a revolver placed right up against the outside of the window pane and pointing directly at his eyes. It was at the right-hand side of the pane, close up to the wooden window frame, and it was impossible in the darkness to see how it was fixed or held in position. Revell, at the first instant of seeing it, had stared incredulously; he half thought himself dreaming. Then, as his wits returned to him more completely, he jerked his chair backward and stood up; and at that moment, with his eyes still fixed upon it, the strange phenomenon disappeared.

Quickly, with sharpening determination to discover what, if anything, had happened, he went to the window and threw it wide open. There was nothing to be seen except the black and starless night. With a growing perception that every second counted, Revell dashed into the corridor.

First he turned to the left, into the dark and empty dormitory. He pressed the switch that should have illuminated it, but no light appeared. The same old trick of the broken fuse. It was natural, perhaps, that he should think so at first, but he remembered, a second later, that Bromley had been in the dormitories during the day removing all the globes and shades for a terminal clean. He heard a sharp movement at the doorway where he had entered and a rush of footsteps along the corridor past his room.

Revell Chases Assailant.

He raced back; his blood was up. The revolver at the window now became an indisputable fact, for he had heard the assailant escaping. Revell chased wildly after him, oblivious of the probability that the fellow still had his revolver with him. At the landing where the stairs led down to the lower floors, Revell halted; it seemed likely that the fugitive had taken the obvious line of escape. But then, in the almost total darkness to which his eyes were becoming accustomed, he noticed that the small door, usually closed and locked, which admitted to the stairs leading up to the disused sick rooms, was very slightly ajar. Revell, listening with his ear to the opening, fancied he heard faint sounds above; that settled it; he pushed the door wide open and began to climb.

At the top of the stairs he found himself panting for breath. Then, almost as if Providence had given him a sign, he heard a faint sound along the corridor to the right.

But now the need for caution began to occur to him. He was in total darkness. He had no flashlight or weapon; the pursued might at any moment turn the beam of a torch upon him and fire. It was not a pleasant thought that somewhere in the darkness a few yards away from him a person, possibly a homicidal maniac, crouched in a corner knowing that he had been traced at last. The danger of people who have already committed several murders is that nothing very much worse can happen to them if they are convicted of an extra one. Revell realized this, and the implication was by no means comforting. He was just preparing for a cautious downward retreat when something happened that stiffened every hair of his head. It was a sound from below like the careful closing of a door.

Trapped? It looked as if he might be, anyhow, and he silently cursed himself for having been such a reckless fool. Meanwhile, he was enveloped by a feeling of slow paralysis, and as he stood there with his back pressed against the wall he knew well enough that he was in deadliest fear as well as danger. The joists still creaked along the corridor to the right—was it only his imagination that made the sound of the creaking seem nearer? But there was something even more horrible to come, for a few seconds later he heard a faint but perfectly identifiable sound from below—the tap of a footstep climbing the stairs.

He licked the perspiration as it streamed down over his lips. What could he do, trapped between an enfilading terror on the right and an ascending one from below?

The footsteps on the stairs were climbing toward him. He was certain of it, though he felt rather than heard their approach. They were soft, stealthy footsteps, creeping up toward him through the blackness. He was sure that in another moment he would either turn sick or scream at the top of his voice or else hurl himself desperately downward against whatever horror might be ascending. All he did, however, was to close his eyes as if to shut out the very perception of darkness. The footsteps were quite near to him now; whatever belonged to them could not be more than a few yards away. Yet still no light! Then, to his utmost horror, he felt a hand reaching out of the darkness and cautiously roving over his hand, his arm, his shoulder, his neck. He opened his mouth to scream but the hand suddenly closed over it, while a hoarse voice whispered in his ear: "Follow me down, you fool, and for God's sake be quiet!"

Human Health Depends on All Parts of Body

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

THE more we know about the human body the more we marvel at the dependence of every organ or structure upon every other. For example, each cell must receive nourishment through an intricate system of tubes transporting blood—the circulation. If the blood supply flags, cells degenerate or die.

We recognize, also, that this vital fluid is a complex affair; that is, it contains many types of cells which have definite functions. These cells may become diseased or show evidences of failing in one respect or another, so that they cannot perform their proper duties. If there are too few red cells or if the red cells are deformed or unripe, as we say, something may be wrong in the blood forming depots—the bone marrow.

Seek to Destroy Germs.

When infection exists the white cells of the blood will collect at the site of the attack and will endeavor to destroy the bacteria. Some of these cells are called granulocytes—the word meaning a cell (cyte) that contains granules. These granules are easily seen under the microscope, because they will absorb certain dyes and may be colored red or blue.

Numerous reports have appeared describing a disease known as granulocytopenia. This names implies too few granule bearing white cells in the blood. The condition is often associated with the use of certain drugs, such as amidopyrine (pyramidon), and some other coal tar products. It has been known for some time that benzene, which is obtained by distilling coal, causes a lowering in the number of granulocytes without affecting the red blood cells, although if this substance is taken in large quantities these latter cells are damaged. Inasmuch as the coal tar products employed in medicine are all derived from benzene, this chemical and its compounds may be poisonous to certain individuals.

Small Fraction Poisoned.

Within the last few years about 40 reports have been published indicting drugs containing amidopyrine as the cause of severe illness. It is admitted, however, that the total of those who show signs of poisoning is but a tiny fraction of that great group who may use this drug.

The case is reported of a physician who had employed a barbituric acid compound (a derivative of coal tar) for insomnia. Two attacks of the blood disease in question (granulocytopenia) were followed by recovery. The drug was omitted entirely and ten months of normal health ensued. As a matter of experiment a single five-grain tablet of amidopyrine was then taken. Within three hours there was marked aching of the bones, a feeling of intense fatigue, temperature of 102 degrees F. and a rapid drop in the number of white cells. Six days later the cells had returned to normal and all symptoms of illness had disappeared.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I have been going with a man for seven years. Marriage has been discussed but no date ever set. His reason, so he says, is that he cannot afford it. I do know when he started in business he had to borrow money and that he now has several other large notes to pay off. He says when we get married he doesn't want to have me fussing because we do not have enough money for the things we want to do. He believes lack of money is the main reason for so many divorces, of which he does not approve.

* * * *

Yet there are times when he does things which make me feel as though this might not be the real reason for our not getting married. To start with, I am a very jealous person—so he says; other people say I am not. One night last week some close friends of his gave a party and asked him. He told me he wouldn't be able to see me that night as he had to work. Later I found out he went to this party. He said he did not tell me because he knew I would fuss, and I shouldn't care about his going, since he wasn't with any one girl, and the only reason he went was because he felt it his duty to go. Those people know me and I feel quite hurt because they didn't ask me. My friends seem to think it would have been only proper to have invited me. Of course, this may be childishness on my part.

* * * *

Before we started going together he went with another girl who has since been married and divorced, but continues to write him. I know he doesn't write her regularly, but he did send her a card at Christmas and since then has received a letter from her which he didn't tell me about. Do you think he should have? He tells me he doesn't care for her in any way, but she always writes and sends him a gift on his birthdays. When she does he says it is only polite that he should thank her. I say he should return her gifts.

* * * *

I must say, though, that he comes to see me almost every night when he doesn't have to work. And except for things like the above which happen once in a while he is most kind and thoughtful. He is 36 and I am 24 years old. I am looking forward to any advice you can give me. Thanking you, I am, M. L.

Direction of the Wind.

DEAR M. L.: It sounds to me as if your friend hasn't made up his mind he wants to marry you, rather than that he can't afford to marry. And since after seven years' courtship he still doesn't know what he wants to do about it all I believe you may go on the assumption that his ardor is diminishing. His willingness to accept invitations which pointedly exclude you, his petty deceptions, his left-handed encouragement of his divorcee friend's attentions, all show which way the wind is blowing—and it is not in the direction of marriage to you.

* * * *

The fact that he comes to see you almost every night when he isn't working is not indisputable evidence of his serious intentions. For one thing, he may come regularly simply because he has acquired the habit, and habit is hard to break; for another, he may in a measure be following the path of least resistance—by which I mean to say, when forced to choose between calling on you regularly or creating a quarrel if he doesn't, he may elect the former as the lesser of two evils; and he may find you amusing, flattering to his ego and generally companionable, and still have no real desire to marry you.

My advice to you is to cut down on the amount of time you've been giving him. See him a couple of nights a week and no more. Throw him on his own resources for amusing himself. Let him go with other women. If he really loves you, the more he sees other women the keener will be his realization of the fact that you are the Only One. If he doesn't love you, it is time for both of you to face the truth.

Start the new program immediately and be candid about your reasons for so doing. If he suspects you of stalling; of concealing an interest in some other man; of being secretly fed up with the association yourself, so much the better. That may be just the incentive required to spur him into a prompt proposal. But if he seems relieved and pleased to receive his walking papers, you might as well forget him as quickly as possible. At 24 you're quite young enough to find yourself lots of other nice beaux. And seven years is entirely too long to wait for any suitor to press his suit.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

"WHILE the boys were at the demolishing age, we didn't try to do much about the dining room furnishings," explained the mother of a high school trio. "But now they have started taking baths without being made to, and otherwise behaving in a very civilized fashion—to our own surprise and delight. Anyway, now we are refurnishing the dining room and would appreciate ideas for making it a pleasant, interesting room. Would you suggest an arrangement of the furniture that won't be too stereotyped?"

Those boys are probably stepping out a lot with their gangs, their teams and their troops. Anyway we suggest here a dining room with a big family table and chairs (5, 6) placed not in the center of the room with the buffet (4) and the china Then under the wide windows place cabinet (7) against adjoining walls. a pair of easy chairs (1, 3) facing each other with a small occasional table (2) between.

This is where the "old folks" don't worry (that's what the high-school generation considers you even if you are in your thrilling thirties) can have a game of cards or even eat when the boys aren't home. After all, a lady and her husband can still enjoy a twosome even if they are the parents of three.

Send for Miss Boykin's bulletin, "Ideas for Dining Rooms."

Colonial Dames Sponsor Exhibit Of Early American Costumes

Feminine Finery of Period Between 1750 and 1860 Was Designed for Comfort, Utility and Beauty; Style Show of Past Shows Gowns of Many Noted Women.

PROOF OUR FEMININE forebears planned their plumage with an eye to both usefulness and beauty is revealed in a current exhibit at Dumbarton House, headquarters of the National Society of Colonial Dames of America, at 2715 Q street.

On the second floor of that historic mansion, is a style show telling more than any printed page about feminine fashions in America before 1860. Any day from now to the end of March, from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m., week days, and 2 to 5 Sundays, Miss 1936 can visit the display and discover what her great-grandmother and her great-great-grandmother (and even another, one more "great" removed) either wore or wanted to wear back in the Colonial days.

The gowns cover a period of more than a hundred years—the oldest dating about 1750, the newest about 1860—but all have full skirts, high waistlines and tight bodices. And all are designed for comfort as well as for style.

One of the most interesting dresses in the exhibit is of flowered material combined with lace and white muslin. Made in London and worn about 1750, this gown belonged to Sally Fairfax, friend of George Washington. It was lent to the exhibit by Mrs. Fairfax Harrison.

Colonial Evening Gowns.

There are also two attractive dresses worn by Dolly Madison and now owned by Mrs. Robert Lovett, of Boston. One is of white cotton, cut in empire style and heavily embroidered in colored thread, shot with gold. The other is dove-colored satin with a white embroidered collar.

A gown that is attracting much favorable attention is made of bayadere silk, in soft shades of green and cream-colored stripes, trimmed with wide silk fringe. It is of the period around 1830 and belongs to Mrs. James C. Pilling.

Arinthia Parker, of Virginia, must have looked lovely when she attended a ball given for Gen. Lafayette in 1824. She wore one of the daintiest frocks in the exhibit, a dusty pink dress of woolen muslin trimmed with ruffles and embroidery and held in at the waist with a pink satin sash.

Another striking evening gown belonged to Rebecca Holmes, daughter of Nathaniel Holmes of Boston Tea Party fame. The young lady obviously knew how to choose feminine finery. This sample from her wardrobe is of red moire topped by a wide lace bertha.

A green quilted evening cloak that belonged to Martha Washington is displayed in a case which also contains an embroidered mull dress ordered from India by Gen. Washington for his wife, a white satin wedding dress, a "second-day dress" (to be worn on the day after the wedding), embroidered hose and handkerchiefs the size of dinner napkins.

Accessories Shown.

The exhibit does more than reveal what women wore back in the early days of America. It throws light on customs of colonial days and points up some of the foibles of women in the times when fainting and flirting were the two leading feminine arts.

There are many beautiful fans—ivory, lace and paper—that women might well have used to hide blushes. There are vinaigrettes, of every size and description, carried to keep smelling salts handy. Instead of vanity cases, women in those days had tortoise-shell coin purses, silver and china patch boxes, and dainty bouquet holders of jeweled silver or gold. Card cases had a place in every lady's belongings, as did decorative comb and fan boxes.

Judging from the gloves, slippers and beaded bags on display, accessories were as important then as they are now. There are wedding gloves of embroidered kid and white and bronze wedding slippers resembling slippers ballet dancers wear today. Some of the most attractive and colorful bags were beaded about 1800 and now belong to Mrs. Frank Simonds.

One of the high lights of the exhibit is a calash, a lady's hood supported by hoops, designed to sit on the shoulders and to pull out like an accordion to project over the face and protect a colonial lady's coiffure when she went out in the evening. It is of cream muslin stretched over reed hoops and belongs to Mrs. Stephen Bonsa.

Paris Dietician Warns Women Not to Overeat

Red Noses, Spotty Faces, Yellow Complexions Cited as Penalties.

PARIS (U.P.).—The pleasures of the table are many, and one of them—eating without restriction—is causing many women to spoil their good looks.

This view is expressed by a French dietician in a recent article on "What Women Should Eat," which has aroused great interest in the Paris press.

"Most of the red noses, spotty faces and yellow complexions which women have these days are caused by excess at the table," he writes. "Cosmetics are wonderful aids to beauty, but their effect is considerably reduced if a woman overindulges at mealtime."

He adds that if women do not want "their mirrors" to reveal a jaded digestion, they should eat little and eat well. This, he says, should be regarded by them as their most important rule of conduct in this respect.

Sex Appeal at Stake.

"Modern conditions," continues the article, "are such that women must sacrifice their tendency toward gourmandizing for the sake of sex appeal.

"To avoid overeating is the first and simplest aid to beauty. Another important safeguard is the eating of plenty of green vegetables, because they contain vitality conveyed directly by the sun. Many of the dishes favored by women and regarded as necessities, actually undermine their beauty. I regard obesity as a malady resulting from lack of attention in regard to food."

The views of the dietician are warmly supported by a number of beauty experts. One expert, commenting on this article, said:

"In my opinion, French women, in particular, overeat to a very great extent. The result is seen in puffy faces and weary eyes, and our task of keeping them young and beautiful is enormously increased. It is time that women paid full attention to the nutritive quality of food rather than to the quantity."

Pony Bags for Travel.

Nerve Strain Often Causes Baby to Fret

Routine Should Never Be Upset, Expert Declares.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

THE BABY was fretful and consequently his mother was worried. She felt sure that he was sick, took his temperature and called the doctor. The doctor, however, gave the child a clean bill of health. He forgot to ask what kind of a life the baby had lived yesterday and the day before. Had he done so, he might have guessed the reason for the baby's fretfulness. It was frazzled nerves.

For two days routine had been badly broken up. The early morning feedings had been delayed, necessitating a change in the daily program. The time for his airing had been changed, there had been bustle and confusion in the house, owing to the coming and going of visitors, all of whom had wanted a peep at the baby.

During most of the six months, the baby had led a quiet, uneventful life, and though he seemed calm and indifferent to the excitement, his nerves were actually under a severe strain. Of course the strain showed in his fractious behavior for some days after.

Routine is essential in a tiny baby's life, and he suffers from any infraction of it. He is still a little animal, only partly conscious, and reacts to outside stimuli with the regularity of a machine. If he is used to a quiet life, bustle and confusion disturb him. Possibly a baby who was brought up in a three-ring circus would object to the uneventful days of a well regulated home.

Stout Women's Sizes Offered In Shop Here

By Ruth Anne Davis.

VENUS may have been a gorgeous goddess in her day but the modern man would call her more than pleasingly plump. She would have found herself embarrassed in the misses' departments, humiliated in the woman's, and, in fact, reduced to tears for a well-fitting wardrobe, unless by chance she discovered a certain little shop that specializes in her sizes. Even the fat lady in the circus can be fitted here.

This shop has lingerie, silk and cotton dresses, and coats, uniforms, and foundation garments. Hosiery ranges in price from 29 cents to $1.19, dresses from $3.98 to $27.50. Coats from $9.98 to $49.50, lingerie from 49 cents to $9.98.

And best of all, the coats and dresses are designed not only to fit but to flatter. Not one among them that doesn't do things in a slenderizing way.

Animals in Soap.

FRANK BUCK, in one of his leisure moments, when he wasn't scouring the jungles for wild beasts, played a trick or two on soap. He took it into captivity, made it into rhinos, tigers and monkeys and then caged it in little pastboard boxes, reproductions of the bamboo and wooden cages used for real animals.

Naturally these Frank Buck soaps delight the very young lads and lassies. And they please their parents, too, since they are an excellent quality of castile.

Ruling the Waves.

MANY A MAN rebels at the wayward wave of his hair. Painstakingly he takes soap and water and plasters the hair close to his head. Hopefully he turns to greases, and awakens with a silent prayer that these will rule the waves. Week after week, month after month he tries this, that, and the others. Finally he investigates the contents of a little box which he finds on his wife's dresser.

At first he thinks it's soap, but he's noticed his wife using it on her hair after shampoos. He might have noticed how glossy smooth it makes her hair, and how easy to arrange. At any rate he tries it. It's a solidified brilliantine, with an almost imperceptible lavender scent. He rubs a little of the cake on his hands, and thence to his hair. Delight of delights! It works. The wave is but a gentle undulation.

Valentine Day Triumph Uses Simple Recipe

Toasting, Tinting of Tropical Confection Is Suggested.

By Dorothea Duncan.

LET your imagination run riot with coconut! There are endless decorative uses to which coconut may be applied. Just take a peek at these delightful cakes, and then read how simple each one is to make. Coconut can be used for an endless number of decorative effects in cooking. You can use your own ingenuity, and originate your own triumphs.

See how many interesting cakes can be created from one standard recipe, when coconut is used for the decorative effect. You will want to try the Valentine cake right away. Rules for making each cake illustrated follow, as well as the method for toasting and tinting this confection.

White Cake.

3 cups sifted cake flour
3 teaspoons double-acting baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup butter or other shortening
1½ cups sugar
½ cup milk
½ cup water
1 teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon almond extract
3 egg whites, stiffly beaten

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift together three times. Cream butter thoroughly, add sugar gradually, and cream together until light and fluffy. Add flour, alternately with liquid, a small amount at a time, beating after each addition until smooth. Add flavoring; fold in egg whites quickly and thoroughly. Bake in two greased 9-inch layer pans in moderate oven (375 degrees F.) 20 minutes. Spread boiled frosting between layers and on top and sides of cake. Double recipe to make three 10-inch layers.

Boiled Frosting.

2 eggs whites, unbeaten
1½ cups sugar
5 tablespoons water
1½ teaspoons light corn sirup
1 teaspoon vanilla

Combine egg whites, sugar, water, and corn sirup in top of double boiler, beating with rotary egg beater until thoroughly mixed. Place over rapidly boiling water, beat constantly with rotary egg beater, and cook 7 minutes, or until frosting will stand in peaks. Remove from boiling water; add vanilla, and beat until thick enough to spread. Makes enough frosting to cover tops and sides of two 9-inch layers.

To Toast Coconut.

Spread coconut in thin layer in pan or baking sheet. Place in hot oven (400 degrees F.) or under broiler. Toast until delicately browned, stirring frequently to prevent burning.

To Tint Coconut.

Coconut may be tinted delicate shades for decorative purposes. Sprinkle coconut on white paper. Dilute a tiny bit of vegetable coloring (paste, powder, tablet or liquid) in small amount of water, pour over coconut, and rub evenly through coconut.

Valentine or Engagement Cake.

Use recipe for white cake. Spread boiled frosting, tinted pale pink, between layers and on top and sides of cake. Lay wax paper cut-out on frosting, in center of cake. Sprinkle remaining top and sides with moist, sweetened coconut. Remove heart-shaped cut-out and fill in design with additional frosting.

Birthday or Anniversary Cake.

Use recipe for white cake. Spread boiled frosting between layers and on top and sides of cake. Cover sides with coconut, tinted pale orange. Next, trace number on top. Now apply coconut in firm little pinches, to form the design, pressing well into frosting. Use cup cakes for candle cakes, spread with boiled frosting, covering with tinted coconut.

Windmill Cake.

Use recipe for white cake. Spread frosting between layers and on top and sides of cake. Make in eight sections. Sprinkle toasted coconut on alternating section, beginning from top center and work out and down sides.

St. Patrick's Cake.

The Culinary Artist Discovers the Importance of Coconut

Canned, sweetened moise coconut—plain, tinted or toasted—has been used to create these delightful cake toppings. A standard cake and frosting recipe has been used for each cake, but by the ingenious use of coconut, each cake has been transformed into a noval and intriguing dessert.

Child Should Eat Main Meal At Noon, U. S. Bureau Advises

Dietary Expert Lists Suggestions for Cooking Food for Youngsters of Nursery Schol and Kindergarten Age; Eggs or Meat, Vegetables, Starchy Foods Needed.

CHILDREN of nursery school and kindergarten age need their principal meal in the middle of the day. This meal should provide egg or meat or other protein-rich main dish, a vegetable rich in vitamins and minerals, a starchy food, and milk. A dessert may also be served. The noon meal, together with an afternoon lunch, usually supplies about one-half of the child's daily food needs.

Here are some suggestions by a nursery school dietitian of the staff of the Bureau of Home Economics. To begin with, serve food that is reasonably easy for the small child to manage. Cut vegetables, meats, and fruits in small pieces or slices. Make other dishes such as puddings, mashed potatoes, or squash of a pleasing consistency, not too thick, too thin, or too dry. Serve crisp toast or something similar which will require the children to chew. This exercise is necessary for good tooth nutrition. Taste all food before serving, to make sure that it is not too salty and does not taste flat.

Do not give highly seasoned or greasy food to children. Use sugar sparingly. Sweets dull the appetite for other foods that contain important nutrients. Evaporated or dried milk may be used in place of fluid milk if fluid milk is not available or is too expensive. If dried skim milk is used add 3 tablespoons of butter to the child's diet to supply the vitamin A that would be furnished by 1 quart of whole milk.

Cook eggs with moderate heat. High temperatures make them tough. Broil meat under a flame or pan-broil it on top of the stove. In either case brown it quickly at first and then finish cooking at low temperature. Cook bacon slowly, pouring off excess fat, and draining the bacon after cooking.

Cook all vegetables in as little water as possible, and only until tender. Do not pour off the liquid left in the vessel after the vegetable is cooked. This liquid contains valuable minerals that contribute to good nutrition. If there is too much liquid left after the vegetable is cooked, boil it down, and pour it back on the vegetable when served.

Cook tomato, or dishes containing tomato, as short a time as possible, because cooking lowers the vtiamin C content. Weigh, rather than measure ingredients where possible, for uniform results. Use standard utensils for measuring and be sure all measurements are level. The Bureau of Home Economics of the U. S. Department of Agriculture will send you menus and recipes if you are conducting a nursery school. They are suited to a group of 25 children and 6 adults.

Artistic Hooked Rugs Made With Bent Nail

Hendersonville, N. C. (AP).—Rags are the materials with which Joy Kime Benton weaves highly artistic hooked rugs.

Her only tool is a bent nail, fixed in a locust handle. The rags are dyed and boiled in iron kettles and then created into the rugs which have won first places in all but one exhibit in which they appeared.

Oranges, Grapefruit and Lemons Make a Delicious Marmalade

IT'S NOT a new idea to make marmalade from an orange, a grapefruit and a lemon. People used to call this "three-way" marmalade because they cooked the fruit on three successive days to remove the strong flavor of the peel and make it tender. But the Bureau of Home Economics found out that the marmalade is just as good when the three boilings are done immediately after each other if the water from each cooking is discarded.

The total cost of "amber marmalade," as it is usually called, when made from one of each fruit, combined with the correct measure of sugar, is between 30 and 40 cents, depending on the local cost of the ingredients. From three medium sized fruit you will get 12 to 14 glasses of marmalade, or about 5 pints.

Amber Marmalade.

1 orange
1 grapefruit
1 lemon
¼ teaspoon salt
sugar

Select smooth, thick-skinned fruit free from blemishes and rust. Wash the fruit, remove the peel, and slice it very thin. Parboil the sliced peel three times in the following way: Add 1 quart of cold water, bring to the boil, cook for 5 minutes, and discard the water after each cooking.

Cut the fruit pulp into thin slices, and remove seeds and "rag." Combine the sliced pulp with the drained, parboil skins. To each measure of this mixed fruit pulp and parboiled skins, add three times the measure of water and boil rapidly for 40 minutes. Then weigh or measure this mixture and to it add an equal weight or measure of sugar. Add the salt. Boil the fruit and sugar rapidly for 25 minutes longer, or until it thickens and becomes amber colored. Watch the marmalade carefully lest it stick and scorch as it cooks down. Let the marmalade stand in the kettle until nearly cool, stir, and pour into scalded jelly glasses. When cold, cover with paraffin and store in a cool, dry, place. The quantities of ingredients given in this recipe should yield about 5 pints of marmalade—12 to 14 glasses.

Salmon Sauce Helps Flavor Many Dishes

Added to Spaghetti or Noodle Recipes, It Gives Variety.

MANY families rather dislike having new dishes tried on them, yet these same families welcome a familiar product with a change that is not drastic, and this change often becomes a favorite. Such a dish is the luscious macaroni and cheese. Instead of macaroni, many cooks use spaghetti and while the flavor of the dish remains the same, the appearance is varied.

To either style of creamed dish try adding salmon to the sauce before combining with the spaghetti. Open the can of salmon, drain and add the juice to the white sauce, free the fish from bones and skin, but do not break the flesh into too small pieces, as it is more appetizing to find large lumps.

You may be wondering why the fish liquid is added to the white sauce. When salmon is canned it is placed in the can without any liquid—only salt is added—and the juice found in the can after the process of cooking is actual juice from the fish. Since it contains food value and flavor it ought never to be discarded.

Aids Rice Rings.

Another standard dish to which salmon adds the charm of de luxe flavor and texture, as well as food value, is that of noodle or rice rings. These rings are made with cooked noodles or rice combined with seasoning and a custard base, so that after baking the ring can be unmolded on a platter. Use any favorite recipe and add to it pieces of canned salmon. The less expensive pink salmon is splendid for such dishes. To a standard recipe using about 1½ cups of noodles add 1 cup of salmon. Serve vegetables in the center.

Vegetable casserole dishes are made richer and more palatable too when salmon is included as one of the ingredients. Salmon left over from another meal may be used in this manner or a fresh can may be opened especially for the vegetable dish.

If you haven't a recipe for a ring mold which includes spaghetti, noodles or macaroni try the following one. Serve it with creamed vegetables occupying the center of the mold.

Macaroni Ring Mold.

¾ cup macaroni
1 teaspoon chopped onion
1½ tablespoons chopped parsley
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
3 eggs
½ cup grated cheese
1 cup medium cream or top milk
1 cup soft, sifted bread crumbs
1 teaspoon salt

Break the macaroni into small pieces and boil in salted water, drain and mix with other ingredients, having the eggs well beaten. Butter a ring mold lavishly, fill with the mixture and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for 45 minutes or until firm to the touch. Remove from serving dish, and fill center with creamed vegetables. A mixture of creamed salmon and green peas makes an interesting filling. Salmon lumps, about ½ cup, may be added to the mixture before baking, if desired. The center may then be filled with a combination of creamed vegetables such as creamed carrots and peas.

How to Make Canapes.

Canapes are made by cutting one-fourth inch slices of bread into fancy shapes. These pieces are then brushed lightly with shortening and browned in oven or fried in deep fat until a golden brown. They are then covered with a seasoned mixture of eggs, force meat or cheese. They are served either hot or cold, depending upon which appeals to the appetite the most.

Famous Women Like A Variety of Diets

OYSTERS, fruits and vegetables form the diet of Lily Pons, petite opera and movie star. Mrs. James Roosevelt orders boned chicken and green peas when she dines out, while Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt prefers chicken mousse.

Estelle Taylor and Irene Dunne are lobster salad enthusiasts, and the Gish sisters, Lillian and Dorothy, like crabs and shrimps.

Calauos Belong To Laurel Family

Fruit Is Magic Appetizer for Any Dinner.

It may seem a far cry from the lovely mountain laurel which we associate with spring in many of our mountain regions, to that exotic fruit, beautifully packaged by nature, which we know as the calavo; but botanically speaking, calavos are members of the laurel family. Horticulturally they belong to the avocado family. The laurel family produces no other fruit, but its other well known and useful products are cinnamon, sassafras, bay leaf, and camphor.

California cocktail is the sort of fruit combination to bring visions of spring flowers on mountain sides. Its a magic appetizer for any hearty dinner.

California Cocktail.

Calavo balls
Royal Anne cherries
Pineapple, diced.

Prepare calavo by cutting halves lengthwise and removing seed and peeling. Turn rounded green side up and cut calavo balls which will be topped with the green edge. Pit cherries and marinate their cut edges with lemon juice to preserve color. Arrange equal parts of diced pineapple, pitted cherries and calavo balls in cocktail glasses. Serve chilled, with Grenadine Dressing.

Baked Apples Can Be Used On Any Menu

BAKED glazed apples are so easy to prepare and can be flavored in so many different ways they will fit into almost any type of menu. They should be served frequently for sheer appeal to the palate.

"To make plain glazed apples wash 4 apples, remove cores and a portion of the skin and place close together in a saucepan, peeled side down. Add 1-3 cup boiling water, cover closely and steam until tender. Transfer to baking dish, peeled side up, sprinkle with ½ to ¾ cup sugar and cook in broiling oven or hot oven until sugar is dissolved, basting with ¼ cup liquid in which they were steamed.

Baked glazed apples with added flavoring are prepared by the following recipes:

Vanilla Syrup.

Baked glazed apples with orange: In place of ½ cup water use juice of 1 orange with water to make ½ cup and grated rind of ½ orange. When tender put in baking dish, fill centers with broken pecan meats and finish like baked glazed apples. These are delicious served as an accompaniment to roast duck or baked ham or fresh pork.

Baked glazed apples with vanilla sirup: Make baked apples flavoring water with ½ teaspoon vanilla.

Baked glazed apples with cinnamon: Make baked apples coloring water with red color pastes or use red juice from plums or berries. Add 2 inches of stick cinnamon. If desired, ½ cup small red cinnamon candies may be dissolved in the water. These chilled make a delightful Valentine salad. Serve in nests of crisp lettuce. Fill the hollow of each apple with cream cheese, white grapes and chopped walnut meats. Serve with a dash of cooked salad dressing blended with whipped cream.

Baked glazed apples with honey filling: Beat ½ cup cream until stiff and beat in gradually 1 to 2 tablespoons honey, ¼ cup chopped walnuts or other nutmeates and a few grains of salt. Serve in the center of baked glazed apples. This makes an ideal dessert for the children's party.

Baked glazed apples with marshmallows: When glazed apples are almost done put a marshmallow in the center of each one and return to the oven or broiling oven to brown.

Mrs. McCeney was a member of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Fairland, Md., and a charter member of the Ladies' Guild.

Sharp Competition Cuts Kroger Profits

Cincinnati, Feb. 11 (AP).—The Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. reported today net income of $4,110,925.98 for the fiscal year 1935 after deducting Federal taxes. This is equivalent to $2.25 per share on common stock outstanding, compared with the 1934 figure of $4,198,241.74, $2.31 a share.

The drop, said the report, was due largely to a decline in gross profit, which was attributed to the "lag between increase in wholesale prices and increase in retail prices, and the serious competition throughout our territory."

Cake Answer to Problem of What to Serve As Delectable Dessert for Holiday Dinner

Upside-Down Pastries Are Described in Recipes for Hostess.

WHEN three holidays fall in one month, you're pretty sure to be entertaining for at least one of them—and the problem of what to serve for dessert is, no doubt, in your mind.

You couldn't decide on anything better than an upside-down cake. Lives there a guest whose eyes won't glisten in anticipatory delight at the vision of a high, tender, melt-in-the-mouth cake crowned with the melting, shining goodness of brown sugar sauce and luscious fruit?

A prune-apricot upside-down cake, for example, is a delectable sight, with the bright gold and dark purple of the alternate apricots and prunes and rich, brown liquid oozing out between the fruit. Here is the recipe as well as one for Normandy upside-down cake.

Prune-Apricot Cake.

1¼ cups sifted cake flour
1¼ teaspoons double-acting baking powder, or 2½ teaspoons ordinary baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
¾ cup granulated sugar
4 tablespoons softened butter or other shortening
1 egg, well beaten
½ cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla

Topping.

4 tablespoons butter
½ cup brown sugar, firmly packed
13 cooked apricots
6 cooked prunes, halved and seeded

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder, salt and sugar, and sift together three times. Add butter. Combine egg, milk and vanilla. Add to flour mixture, stirring until all flour is dampened; then beat vigorously one minute.

Melt four tablespoons of butter in 8x8x2 inch pan or 8-inch skillet over low flame; add brown sugar and cook and stir until thoroughly mixed. On this, arrange apricots and prunes, cut-side up, alternating an apricot and a prune half. Turn batter out on contents of pan. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) 50 minutes, or until done. Loosen cake from sides of pan with spatula. Serve upside down cake on dish with fruit on top. Garnish with whipped cream, if desired. A sauce made from apricot and prune juice is also a delicious accompaniment for this dessert, making the dessert less expensive, and less rich than when served with whipped cream.

Normandy Upside-Down Cake.

Use same cake mixture as for prune-apricot upside-down cake. Other ingredients are:

Prunes and Apricots Are Suggested as Base for Delicacy.

4 tablespoons butter
½ cup brown sugar, firmly packed
¼ teaspoon cinnamon
2 large apples, pared and thinly sliced
1 teaspoon lemon juice

Melt four tablespoons of butter in 8x8x2 inch pan or eight-inch skillet over low flame; add brown sugar and cinnamon and cook and stir until thoroughly mixed. On this, arrange overlapping slices of apple. Sprinkle with lemon juice. Turn batter out on contents of pan. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) 50 minutes, or until done. Loosen cake from sides of pan with spatula. Serve upside down on dish with apples on top. Garnish with whipped cream if desired. Rich hot milk, sweetened and flavored to taste with vanilla, or lemon sauce are interesting accompaniments for this upside down cake, too.

Paid Firemen Are Proposed For Arlington

Clarendon Citizens to Put Question Before County Board for Action.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 500. Clarendon, Va.

Advocating paid firemen for Arlington County, Mrs. L. McNemar, president of the Clarendon Citizens Association, appointed a special committee at last night's meeting to appear before the county board Friday and ask that consideration be given to the matter.

It was pointed out by members of the association that the county owns all the equipment and at least the drivers should be paid. It was further stated that the men are called out all hours at the risk of their lives to save homes with no compensation.

The committee which will appear before the board consists of Mrs. Carrie Gibson, A. C. Putnam and J. Thomas Manning.

With plans of the revised route for completion of Lee boulevard from Lyon Park to Arlington Memorial Bridge now in the hands of the United States Bureau of Public Roads for approval, T. W. Ross, State highway engineer, was in the county yesterday checking on rights of way.

All but two tracts have been obtained and condemnation proceedings for one of the two have been filed by Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas. Efforts are being made by both State and county officials to obtain the other without court proceedings.

It is expected that the highway department will advertise for bids for the road within the next 30 days.

Meeting in joint session last night, the board of directors of the Arlington Volunteer Fire Department and the building committee completed plans for erection of a second story to the firehouse. The specifications have been prepared by Kenton Hamaker, architect, of Arlington County.

Arthur Stickley 2d announced that bids for the addition, which it is estimated will cost approximately $3,500, will be received and opened at a meeting to be called early next week. The building committee consists of W. W. Wheelock, chairman; David Watson, William Clark, Charles Snoots and L. B. Donaldson.

A four-page newspaper called "Henry Clay Twitter," published by the sixth grade pupils of Henry Clay School at Lyon Park, made its first appearance yesterday. Members of the staff are Walter Ludwig, jr., editor; Frank Foster, assistant editor; Elsie Leadbetter, social editor; B. Glover, circulation manager, and Jack Diehl, business manager.

A. C. Scheffel, Arlington County fire marshal, has urged citizens to use more care in the operation of their furnaces. Yesterday there were four alarms of fire within less than two hours and in all but one instance, reports showed, they were caused by overheated furnaces.

Troops Rule Damascus As 2 More Rioters Die

Jerusalem, Feb. 11 (AP).—French military authorities under the command of Gen. Huntzinger took over the city government of Damascus today after two more rioters had been killed in Nationalist disturbances.

Martial law, however, was not declared.

Damascus jails were filled by the transfer of 200 rioters arrested last Friday at Hama as the military authorities planned construction of concentration camps.

Today's casualties occurred when demonstrators stoned a carpenter's shop.

CREAM may taste sweet and yet be sour. In fact, the cream you use on your own table may not meet the exacting requirements for LAND O' LAKES Sweet Cream Butter.

Cream tests at Land O'Lakes Creameries are so rigid that cream with only two-tenths of one percent acidity (not enough for the average person to taste) is set aside and never used in churning this butter.

Naturally, this SWEET cream butter has a fresher, more tempting flavor than ordinary butter made from SOUR cream.

Every churning of this sweet cream butter is U. S. government graded. Only the 93 score butter is packaged under the name of LAND O'LAKES Sweet Cream Butter. Every package contains a "Certificate of Quality" issued by authority of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Karaveaff, Achmatova Also Star in Week's Presentation.

By Chanticleer.

Elena Gabriel's in town. Elena comes all the way to the Russian Troika from Paree's famous Folies Bergere. It's her first appearance since she left the home town across the big pond. Perhaps Elena will be a little disappointed with Washington audiences. Seems as if a Washingtonian gets into a night club and then lets his hands freeze together.

Take the Troika, for example. A swell floor show this week, with Karaveaff in a Ukranian peasant sketch, as the village drunk, assisted by Marusi Sava. And there's Pauline Achmatova singing "Bublitchky" and the ever popular "My Man." The Karaveaff in a Russian tap and kazotsky—and he's said to be the only dancer in the country able to do this little nifty. And so from number to number—excellently done down to the finale with thumping tamborines and squeezing of accordions.

And the customers really love it. But they're so blase about it all.

* * * *

It's the Oriental influence at MaryLand Club Gardens this week, with Lillian Belle on hand in snaky and sinuous Oriental and Congo dance numbers. And Ray Beck is now with Jimmy Harris and his orchestra for the vocalizings. And of course Fran Trappe, the squeeze-box master, and the comedy dance team of Terry and Walker in a routine of dizzy antics. Keep an eye on the big charity ball at the Gardens next Tuesday night . . . For the regular Friday movie night at the Shoreham this week—a specialty of a cellophane wedding scene. Yes, sir, it's a special Valentine treat entitled "Waiting at the Church," by Jack Pepper and Miss Maud Muhlig, of Hollywood. All in cellophane for the cameras . . . An innocent associate of the proprietor of this space got a very uxtry special reception at the Dude Ranch a night or two ago. It seems some suggestion that the ranch's band was out of step with a floor artist slipped in here in our last report—and Maestro Garron and the boys gave the i. a. quite a welcome. Shorty Freeman, of Chateau Lido, down at Daytona, is warbling with the ork now . . . The Mayfair is presenting a young accordionist formerly with Rudy Vallee. He is Michael—and very good he is. Also Mel Christopher, the magic gentleman, is entertaining at the Mayfair this week. Some of his tricks are being used all over the country by leading sleight-of-hand artists. . . . Plenty of variety and color at the Madrillon, where the Ojedas, Louis and Josephine, are presenting a repertoire of some numbers. They're Mexicans—but direct from Radio City's Music Hall. Their performance is not gummed up with our own native hot-cha experts . . . Here's a new night spot to look over—the Club Amsterdam, up Fourteenth street way. Featuring no cover, no minimum, with dinner music from 6 to 7:30 and dancing from 9 to 1, including Sundays. Floor shows are set for 10 and 12 nightly . . . Even after-dark spots have their mysteries. At the Cafe Samovar the other night a couple slipped in out of the dreary night, followed by another. Until soon there were 45 in the party, all seated at tables pulled together. It's a new high for one party, arriving so inauspiciously and all . . . Matt Windsor is in New York this week scouting around for another Consuelo Gonzales for his Club Volga Boatman. Incidentally, the fiery little singing star will remain with us at least four weeks more. Don't forget the bridge lessons at the Volga Boatman every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday afternoon . . . Marya and Martyn are opening a two weeks' engagement for Pete Macias at the Club Heigh-Ho this week, with a swell reputation built on their own original dance creations. And calling your attention to the formal tap room gatherings, now Massa Pete's pride and joy . . . It's really Don Rice's first week as a professional master of ceremonies, but the La Paree's comedian is far from being a novice before the citizens at ringside tables. He's been on the stage years—with Olson and Johnson and with Frank Libuse. He'll be back here after an engagement with Toby Wing in Boston next week.

Around the Night Club Floors This Week

On the Air Today

AMONG the programs scheduled for observance of Abraham Lincoln's birthday anniversary:

WRC at 10: Address by Herbert Hoover at one of a series of banquets held by Republicans in celebration of the day, speaking from Portland, Oreg.

WMAL at 10:30: National Republican Club Lincoln Day dinner, with address by Senator Arthur H. Vandenburg, Col. Theodore Roosevelt, president of the club, presiding.

WRC at 1:30: "The Shadow of Lincoln," written by Wade Arnold, tracing Lincoln's life through a series of episodes picturing him through the eyes of persons who knew him.

WMAL at 6:15: The Gettysburg address, by Charles Laughton, by short wave from England. Laughton's reading of the address was the dramatic high spot of the picture, "Ruggles of Red Gap."

WMAL at 4:15: "A Personal Glimpse of Lincoln." Story of the war President as he was remembered by Dennis Hanks, told by Thomas Heier, arranged with co-operation of the Y. M. C. A.

WJSV at 2:30 American Legion pilgrimage to Lincoln's tomb at Springfield, Ill., with messages by national commander and Gov. Horner of Illinois.

WJSV at 8: "Cavalcade of America," dramatizations of episodes in Lincoln's life, with Charles Webster, veteran portrayer of Lincoln on the air.

WJSV at 7:30: Kate Smith sings Lincoln's favorite song, "Last Rose of Summer."

WOL at 11:15 a. m.: Johann Singer, concert pianist, in an instrumental tribute to Lincoln.

* * * *

WOL at 9: "Lincoln's Birthday," with Gen. Albert Cox.

* * * *

Gordon Hittenmark, WRC's timekeeper, is looking far beyond all this dismal and dreary winter weather. Gordon sits by hours with his feet in the window dreaming of spring—and golf days once more. In fact, he already has laid plans to hold a special Timekeeper golf tournament in due time. All the details will be announced in the near future betwen Hittenmark records.

* * * *

Johann Singer's piano program this morning (WOL, at 11:15) is quite novel. He will play seven of the most beloved American songs, including "Old Black Joe," "Turkey in the Straw," and others, in styles of the master composers. For example, "Home Sweet Home" will be played as an Arabian dance in the Tschaikowsky manner: "Swanee River," as a minuet conceived by Bach; "Yankee Doodle," as Beethoven and Chopin might have written it.

Featured today:

Fred Allen: Presents Talkative Tom," a Mynah Bird speaking 78 words, WRC, at 9. Extra! Jack Benny makes a guest appearance.

Oil can solo: Novelty highlight of "Corn Cob Pipe Club," WMAL, at 9.

"Gang Busters:" Phillips Lord presents story of the "bloody Barrows," WJSV, at 10. Based on actual case police records.

Fourth Symphony: By Bethoven, featured in Rochester Symphony hour, WMAL, at 3.

* * * *

The guest appearance of Jack Benny in Fred Allen's show tonight should be one for the book. They're rated the two sharpest ad-libbers in the business.

Cuban Flier Completes Hop Over South Atlantic

Dakar, French West Africa, Feb. 11 (AP).—Lieut. Antonio Menendez, of the Cuban navy, completed a flight across the South Atlantic last night, landing safely at Bathurst, West Africa, after a flight from Natal, Brazil.

Menendez, who left Brazil at 11:10 p. m. (9:10 p. m. E. S. T.) Sunday night, arrived at Bathurst at 9 p. m., G. M. T. (4 p. m. E. S. T.) last night.

Menendez made his transatlantic flight after proceeding to Natal by easy stages from Cuba.

The distance from Natal to Bathurst is about 2,000 miles.

15-Ounce Baby's Meal Is Biggest Since Birth

Oakland, Calif., Feb. 11 (AP).—Fifteen-ounce Nancy Lee Vogt cried lustily for dinner today and was rewarded with her biggest meal since her premature birth nine days ago.

The diet for the smallest baby on record here was increased again—from two teaspoonsful of mother's milk every two hours to three teaspoonsful every hour.

In addition, Nancy Lee was given her first drop of vitamin D, in a prepared solution which attending physicians said will be "a daily treat" from now on.

Organizer of Radio Club Joining 20 Nations Dies

Los Angeles, Feb. 11 (AP).—Paul J. Potter, 28, who organized one of the world's unusual clubs, died today of pneumonia.

Potter was an amateur short-wave radio station owner. Through his station, W6HXP, Los Angeles, he formed an organization of short-wave station operators in 20 nations. The club held "meetings" during the last year each Thursday morning—from 2 a. m. to 5 or 6 a. m.

The Los Angeles operator called the sessions, and "presided" as master of ceremonies.

Broadway Goes to Miami

By Ed Sullivan

Topics of the Tropics.

Miami Beach, Feb. 11.—Most amazing thing to a Broadwayite visiting this community is the gambling fever that has the town's temperature above normal. If you want to bet, the spots here will accommodate you, offering everything from chemin de fer to dice to horses to roulette to hazard. In the event these don't appeal, you can get action on the slot machines, the dog races or the stock market. The action is designed to fit any pocketbook. There is one place here, Carter's, which has roulette wheels restricted to 10-cent chips. It runs day and night, and old-timers tell me that even Tex Rickard's place during the gold rush couldn't match it. Women, with children tugging at their skirts, come here on cloudy afternoons to while away the time. The ladies favorite roulette number, the croupiers tell me, is 29. There is one lady who bets on the day of the month. Today she will keep playing No. 11.

Young Atwater Kent came in from Palm Beach yesterday, tied his yacht up off the Fleetwood and then made the rounds of the town . . . I ran into him at Palm Island Casino in the wee hours, with Harry Ritz putting on a personal show . . . Pete Barley, jr., and Anne Foster were in the Kent party, and their engagement will be announced soon . . . Presence of the Earl Carroll girls at this spot makes this the focal point of the local romances . . . Despite the fact that Carroll won't permit any of his eyefuls to get tanned, their pale-white charm is effective . . . Carroll himself has switched to Rose Heightner, and Beryl Wallace has gone back to Broadway.

Of the Carroll choir, here are the cheek-to-cheek combinations at the moment . . . Leila Steppe and Billy Rayes, Rose Collins and Mark McCann, Geneva Steppe and Chick Howard, Chickie Anderson and Dick Dixon, in the Jerry Freeman band, and Marie Marks and Cecil Sillman . . . This latter pair will be married in March . . . Jerry Freeman has switched his tag down here . . . He is Jay Crandall for the local engagement.

Cary Byer, right-hand man to powerful Henry L. Doherty, is a former University of Iowa football star . . . Frank Keeney, biggest race track better here, goes to the track with his feet encased in blue bedroom slippers . . . On formal occasions, he wears spats above them . . . On Sunday, the Roney-Plaza Pool was distinguished by a group of mighty midgets . . . It is the only day during the week that the jockeys can go swimming . . . The plungers take a bath regularly, however, at the race track . . . Earl and Josephine Leach, dance team, recommended by this column, will be screen tested by Universal . . . F. D. Roosevelt will be here in March . . . Buddy Rogers and his band pack up and leave Saturday for a theater tour, starting at Pittsburgh . . . He will never marry Mary Pickford, despite reports . . . This is inside stuff.

Ann Morales in a form-fitting blue bathing suit . . . Joan Evans, of the E. Carroll crew, working out a crossword puzzle . . . Annette Ritz (Mrs. Al Ritz to you) sitting in front of a barbecue stand, munching a barbecued beef sandwich . . . Sophie Tucker warbling "Life Begins at 40" . . . Mrs. Jim Moffett chatting with Col. E. R. Bradley and John Sanford, Laddie's dad . . . Jim Moffett and Pinkie Miller winning $1,300 when Fusco won and paid $72 for a $2 ticket . . . Bill Dwyer and Jerry Brady wallowing in the surf . . . Eddie Collins, the best-dressed man on the beach, with a colorful cravat as a throat clamp . . . Ramon and blonde Renita dancing at Ira's Supper Club to Buddy Wagner's swell music . . . She has the cutest ankles in town . . . Ramon says that the greatest dance team of the past ten years is the De Marcos . . . Maurice, he believes, was the greatest showman . . . French Casino show here is doing a land office business, with 900 diners nightly . . . I like Jack White's pert flippancies at the Pavilion, where he's teamed with another West Fifty-second street product, Frances Faye . . . The Paddock is the hottest of the late spots . . . H. Richman, who rates $2,500 in Broadway clubs, gets $4,000 a week at the Beach and Tennis Club.

Though she's independently wealthy as a result of the Smith Reynolds inheritance, Libby Holman is a pretty good business woman in her own right . . . Booked in the Town Casino Club here, Libby insisted that her $2,200-a-week must be posted in advance with a local bank . . . The Shubert lawyer, Bill Klein, is here with his famous sun-tan recipe . . . It has an evil smell, but it is the best . . . Local theaters must be doing big business here . . . The Olympia offered a starting sum for the Dawn Patrol Revue, but no can do . . . I've got to get to N'Orleans for that Mardi Gras . . . Swifty Morgan is my favorite local character . . . He is 52 years old, carires a cane and surveys the world through cynically amused orbs . . . He came from Carlisle, Pa., the town that produced the famous Jim Thorp and Pop Warner's Carlisle Indians, and for 40 years Swifty has lived fast and dangerously . . . His reminiscences of gambling characters are lively and colorful, and he rates the late Frank Dwyer the greatest "con" man he ever met . . . "Dwyer could have talked his way out of a Miami hotel bill," Swifty tells you with great earnestness . . . That is sheer greatness . . . The Miami skyline, across Biscayne Bay, is New York in miniature at night and gorgeous to look at . . . The town is moving on . . . P. S.: It is still raining here . . . Some sun, huh, kid?

Schulte Asks Rule to Limit Traffic Turns

Urges New Regulations at Congressional Hearing.

A new traffic regulation, prohibiting all left turns in the congested downtown area, was proposed yesterday by Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, as a remedy for Washington's traffic problem.

He offered the suggestion during hearings before the special Congressional sub-committee on traffic.

"This plan has been adopted by 'progressive' cities," Schulte said. "I believe that, by banning left turns anywhere in the congested area, we wil cut the accident toll and avoid trouble. I have observed during the past 30 days that these turns block traffic. Let the police stop them."

His suggestion to ban left turns came after Capt. Herbert C. Whitehurst, director of highways, had outlined plans for an extensive street-widening program. Capt. Whitehurst, first witness yesterday, named a number of streets in need of "immediate remodeling."

"We are going to have a hell of a time getting money to widen streets," said Schulte. He offered the turning ban as an alternative.

Street-Widening Study.

Capt. Whitehurst opened his testimony by explaining that his department made a study of street-widening between 1925 and 1931.

"Only minor widening operations have been undertaken since then," he said. "There is still much widening to be done in the congested area."

He cited Thirteenth street, Connecticut avenue, and H street northwest, as thoroughfares which have been aided by widening. There is little congestion on these streets, he said.

Two additional widening projects, designed to relieve K street from Thirteenth street to Connecticut avenue, and M street through Georgetown, are now under consideration.

He said the K street plan calls for a center roadway for fast-moving traffic, flanked by two "service roadways" for slow-moving traffic and parking. An "island" 10 feet wide would sererte the roadways. This, he said, would allow the preservation of existing shade trees.

Names Three Plans.

Capt. Whitehurst named three plans for relieving traffic congestion on M street through Georgetown—from Twenty-ninth street to Key Bridge. The plans are:

1. Rerouting traffic via Prospect avenue.

2. Building of a highway on the bed of the old C. & O. Canal, with a ramp connecting Key Bridge.

3. Construction of an elevated highway over K street, from Twenty-ninth street through Georgetown, connecting with Canal road and Key Bridge by ramps.

Capt. Whitehurst said he favored the latter plan. He said that estimates are now being prepared to determine the cost of these projects.

He was next questioned by Representative Carpenter (Democrat), of Kansas, chairman of the special subcommittee.

"What plans have you made to redesign circles?" Capt. Whitehurst was asked.

"We have made designs for changing several circles and have studied conditions around all of them. I believe these studies should be continued," he answered.

At this point, Representative Wood (Democrat), of Missouri, suggested that all circles be eliminated.

"Or else run the streets through them," he said.

"I don't believe they should be removed," replied Capt. Whitehurst.

Justifiable Homicide.

Representative Schulte spoke up:

"Any Washingtonian feels that it is justifiable homicide to suggest removal of those statues in the center of circles. If you suggest removal of circles, you might just as well pick your spot in Arlington."

Wood then suggested subways for both vehicles and pedestrians. He asked Capt. Whitehurst the probable cost.

"It's hard to tell," he replied. "Subways have been built anywhere from $3,000,000 to $8,000,000 a mile."

Walter E. Kern, District electrical engineer, was the next witness. He said that the 1934 cut in street lighting appropriations had resulted in the elimination of 1,215 street lights, and power reduction in 4,615 others.

Gambling Trial Of Irwin, Aids Nearing Close

Government Expected to Call Only One More Witness Today.

Government evidence in the case of Morris E. (Dutch) Irwin and six of his associates, who are on trial in District Supreme Court on a charge of conspiring to violate the gaming laws, will close early today, Prosecutors Samuel F. Beach and Roger Robb announced late yesterday.

Only one more witness is expected to be put on the stand to support the charge that Irwin and his colleagues maintained a huge gaming establishment on upper Fourteenth street northwest, which was raided by police last year.

That witness, it was said, will attempt to identify the signature of Irwin on a motion he filed in District Supreme Court in a fruitless plea that the charges against him be quashed.

Defense attorneys, Joseph D. Kelly, Harry T. Whelan and Charles E. Ford, yesterday closely cross-examined Government witnesses. They insisted on knowing intimate details of the information the raiders obtained when they practically demolished the second and third floors of the Fourteenth street establishment last October.

The Government placed in evidence four heavy doors which, it was claimed, were used to keep those not "in the know" out of the place. One of the doors was of steel, and another was a thick, reinforced oak, with a small, diamond-shaped peep-hole. Justice F. Dickinson Letts overruled five motions by the defense for withdrawal of a junior and a consequent mistrial.

Sentiments Varied, With the Pickanniny Motif More Prevalent.

Priced to fit every purse and ranging in sentiment from vilification to deification, Valentine cards are moving briskly on sales counters, dealers reported yesterday.

There seems to be no particular theme this year, although the pickanniny motif is somewhat more prevalent. A brief survey of some shops revealed no trend comparable, say to the Mae West fad of a few Februarys ago or the New Deal idea.

Leap Year, which this is, should be productive of a card or two but none of this type was found. There was one, however, which should appeal to swains too bashful to pop the question vis a vis. Directly to the point, it goes:

I'm tired of this single life
I'd gladly risk the storm and strife
And hardships of a married life
If you'd consent to be my wife.

You don't have to go to the 1-cent, comic valentine counter to find the chiding variety of card. Backseat drivers, girls who are too fat, speed demons and others needing advice can be handled nicely without resorting to those cruel penny caricatures.

For example (illustrated with a sad faced, 160-pound damsel):

Slow down on the calories
That taste so good and nice
It's the girls with slender figures
That are getting all the rice.

More dignified, both in their text and pictures, are the 50-cent and $1 valentines. For the most part they depict two dreamy-eyed sweethearts, nicely tinted and swathed in lace.

"Does anyone really pay $1 for a valetnine?" a clerk was asked.

"Indeed, we sell quite a few of them," she replied, "but, of course, the nickel and dime cards are the most popular."

Autopsy to Fix Cause Of McDonough's Death

An autopsy was ordered yesterday by Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, in the death at 1520 South Capitol street of Patrick McDonough, 59, unemployed huckster and Spanish War veteran.

As the house was unheated, investigators wished to determine whether McDonough died of exposure or heart disease.

Police reported the victim's wire-haired terrier, standing guard over his fallen master, tried to prevent them from disturbing the body.

Alas, Poor Hamlet Gets Leash, But He Escapes Jail Threat

Hamlet will not go to jail. He will not even have to stand trial. His freedom will, however, be limited to the end of a leash.

Hamlet, 180-pounds of dog, a Great Dane, owned by Mr. and Mrs. W. Forbes Morgan, of 2520 Massachusetts avenue northwest, would have gone on trial for his freedom had not Assistant Corporation Counsel James W. Lauderdale decided yesterday that there was insufficient evidence to warrant Police Court prosecution for viciousness.

The trouble all started when more than 20 persons living in the neighborhood complained to Lauderdale that Hamlet was a menace to the lives and welfare of smaller dogs. They asked that the dog be removed from their neighborhood.

Lauderdale in deciding the case cited a letter from Joseph P. Tumulty, chief counsel for Mrs. Morgan, promising that the dog will be kept on a leach whenever he is taken out in the future.

In dismissing the case, Lauderdale issued a statement saying he had been assured it was Mrs. Morgan's "sincere desire in every way to be a good neighbor and to relieve every fear on the part of her neighbors of the idea of the dog being at large on the streets, and that she is quite willing to see to it that the dog is never allowed out without being on a leash."

Residents of the section who signed a petition that Hamlet was vicious, refused to comment yesterday on Lauderdale's verdict.

Funeral services for Clifford L. Gerard, 60, of 1352 Longfellow street northwest, assistant yardmaster at the Washington Terminal, who died Sunday, will be held today at 2 p. m. at the Chambers funeral home. The Rev. Dr. Richard A. Born in this city, Gerard first worked at the old Pennsylvania Station, at Sixth and B streets. He was transferred to the Washington Terminal when that was built. He served on the railroad for 39 years.

He was a veteran of the Spanish-American War, and a member of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. He was also a Scottish Rite Mason and a member of the Almas Temple of the Shrine.

Magician?

Baker's Artifices Fail to Unlock Own Door.

Besides being Washington manager for the Wilson Steamship ine, Harry N. Baker is quite an amateur magician. He can do things with cards and coins; he probably can pull rabbits out of a hat, but——

Yesterday morning Baker was scheduled to do some tricks for the Early Birds, a breakfast club composed of young businessmen. He appeared all right, but just before his performance was to begin he remembered that he had left something in his room in the Willard—maybe a rabbit.

He went to the room. Having obtained what he was after, he started out and found that he was locked in. He twirled the knob with his deftfingers, he slammed his shoulder against the door, but it wouldn't budge. He was trapped.

He called Harry Summerville, the Willard manager, but even the hotel's master key wouldn't open the door. The apostle of Houdini finally was rescued by a locksmith.

Calnan Named To Presidency Of Liberty Bank

Succeeds Rolfe E. Bolling, Mrs. Woodrow Wilson's Brother, Who Died.

Michael F. Calnan, who began his career as a utility clerk in the Liberty National Bank, yesterday was elected president of that institution by the board of directors. He had been vice president and cashier.

Mr. Calnan, who is 46, succeeds the late Rolfe E. Bolling, brother of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, who died last week.

The city's newest bank president became associated with the Liberty National in 1919, after he had returned from 16 months service with the A. E. F. in France. His ability brought him quick promotion. In January, 1920, he was named assistant cashier and in May, 1922, cashier. He was elected vice president in 1931, but continued his duties as cashier.

Mr. Calnan was born September 16, 1890, at Lonaconing, Md., and was educated there.

He is an active member of the District Bankers Association, a member of the board and treasurer of St. Vincent's Home and School, a member of the Catholic Board of Charities, treasurer of the Cardinal Gibbons Institute and a member of Alhambra, Knights of Columbus, Washington Board of Trade, Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, Sons of Veterans of the Civil War and American Legion.

The vacancies of vice president and cashier are expected to be filled at the next meeting of the board of directors.

Drastic Speed Law Proposed in House

Favorable reports on four District bills were filed in the Senate yesterday by the Senate District Committee as Chairman Norton, of the the House Distrcit Committee, introduced a bill to increase the penalties for reckless driving.

The bills reported with minor amendments to the Senate are the bribery measure passed by the House, the District Commissioners' bill to provide a narcotics act similar to that in force in 29 States, the resolution for the Boy Scout Jamboree in 1937, and authorization for a healing arts license to Dr. Arthur B. Walker.

The reckless driving bill, identical with the measure introduced by Chairman King, of the Senate District Committee, provides a penalty of $500 fine or six months' imprisonment for the first offense, and $1,000 or a year's' imprisonment, or both, for subsequent offenses.

As no sub-committee is prepared to report any of the pending local bills, the House District Committee will not hold its regular meeting today.

John Wilson, Negro, Given School Post

Appointee to Board of Education Active in Civic Affairs.

Lawyer Had an Enviable Record in District, Quinn Says.

John Wilson, leading Negro criminal lawyer, and for more than 20 years active in Parent-Teacher affairs, was appointed yesterday to the Board of Educatoin to fill the unexpired term of Benjamin L. Gaskins, who died a month ago.

A member of the bar for 24 years, Wilson argued numerous cases before the same judges of the District Supreme Court who made the appointment. The last prominent murder trial in which he figured was his successful defense of three of six colored youths who were accused of killing Officer Milo J. Kennedy in Logan Circle three and a half years ago.

Active in Civic Affairs.

For the last six years Wilson has served as president of the Parent-Teacher Association of the Birney School. He is a former president of the Citizens Association of Anacostia and a former vice president of the Federated P.-T. A. for Negro Schools.

Wilson's appointment was hailed as "a mighty fine one" by Henry L. Quinn, lawyer and member of the Board of Education.

"I've known him for more than 30 years," Quinn said. "I knew him when he was a law student and have watched his successful career as a lawyer with great interest. He is level-headed and capable and stands high in the estimation of the judges and lawyers with whom he has worked."

Quinn recalled his first meeting with Wilson when the latter was a messenger boy in a gun shop at the Washington Navy Yard. At the time, Quinn was studying law and working in the ordnance department.

Born 46 years ago in the house adjoining the Baptist church, in the 1600 block of Vermont avenue northwest, Wilson received his education in local schools.

Studied Law at Howard.

He attended the Garnet elementary school, went to Armstrong High School and then studied law at Howard University. While at Armstrong, he gained the distinction of being the first cadet captain to win a medal for the school. He worked at the Navy Yard while studying at both Armstrong and Howard University.

Upon his graduation from Howard in 1909, he started practicing law.

Wilson, who lives at 2631 Nicholas avenue southeast, has a grown daughter, Thelma, who was graduated from Howard University department of education in 1933, and who is now serving as a substitute school teacher.

Secretary Urges Laws In War on Silicosis

Leigslation to lessen exposure to silicosis was urged last night by Secretary Perkins before the Women's City Club. Approximately 2,000,000 workers in this country, she said, are exposed to the deadly disease, caused by inhaling particles of silica dust.

George M. Cohan Reveals a Fine Independence in the Shaping of His New Play

Tosses Custom To Four Winds To Open Show

Goes Into New York Soon; 'Disraeli' Wednesday; Theater Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Betraying the same independence in the shaping of his newest comedy-melodrama as always has characterized his contributions to the stage and set him apart as an actor-author-producer-composer of independent thought and action, George M. Cohan violates many accepted precedents in "Dear Old Darling," current at the National.

To begin with, he opens the show—almost an unheard of thing for a star of his standing to do. Usually the practice is for the subordinates in the cast to construct an elaborate "build-up" for the entrance of the star. Mr. Cohan is his own "build-up" and so makes the first entrance of the play in company with Ruth Shepley, as the charming young woman who is about to throw him over for perfidious enterprises on a trip abroad.

The second of Mr. Cohan's daring exploits in his new play is to make his entrance in a highly jingled condition. The fellow has on a crying jag that is a beauty to behold!

A New Adventure.

Never before have I seen the "Yankee Doodle" comedian in a scene of precisely this nature. Never before have I ever seen an interval of amusing colloquy of this precise nature so perfectly played.

There is in these departures from a strictly orthodox species of playwriting the reflection of a profound understanding of the requirements of the theater as a place of amusement and a brilliant capacity for making them come true.

I can think of no other player who could so completely encompass the character of Calvin Miller as George M. Cohan. Perhaps he wrote the part to his own perfect measure intentionally. It would be too bad to see anyone else attempt to realize so completely the full potentialities of the role.

Incidentally, "Dear Old Darling," will not be out of New York much longer. It is my belief that it will open in the Alvin Theater in New York within a fortnight.

And will Broadway have fun!

The recurrent demand of Washington moviegoers for a revival of one of George Arliss' earliest and most distinguished films, the screen version of his stage hit "Disraeli," by the late Louis N. Parker, will be answered by the Belasco Theater tonight, when this great historical drama will be given a preview showing. The preview will be, as usual, after the final projection of "First a Girl," starring the vivacious Miss Jessie Mathews. A new print of the famous, prize-winning classic was secured from the laboratory for this special Washington engagement. This is an event worth considering—especially for those who did not view the picture upon the occasion of its original release in 1929.

Chicago in Slump.

An illuminating commentary upon the present state of the living theater is revealed by the fate of several once thriving theater properties in Chicago, second largest city in the United States and formerly a thriving "show town."

Famous playhouses are being torn down to make more profitable parking lots for motor cars.

While Mr. Reuben Frodin, of the Associated Press' observant band of commentators remembers that the Woods, Apollo, Garrick, Playhouse and Princess theaters in the so-called Windy City at one time flourished as legitimate homes of the drama, he also recalls that when the bottom dropped out of "show business," shortly after the inception of our perfectly dandy and enduring depression, they also were found easily adaptable to the remunerative uses of the cinema.

They were the uptown, or Randolph street, group of playhouses. The comparatively downtown Illinois Theater, 'way below on Jackson boulevard, between Michigan and Wabash avenues, was not so lucky.

Had Brilliant Record.

Opened on October 15, 1900, the Illinois, the Hayman and Davis—that would be the husband of the famous Jessie Bartlett Davis of musical comedy and operetta, not to mention the old Bostonians—substitute for their former Columbia Theater that burned down on Monroe street one early morning, was the Chicago arena for many of the most distinguished activities of such stars as Henry Irving, Ellen Terry, Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree and the Divine Sarah Bernhardt.

It also housed many of the foremost musical productions of its day, including many editions of the Ziegfeld "Follies."

The Illinois was dedicated by Julia Marlowe, when she was an individual star, in a dramatic version of "When Knighthood Was in Flower." The last major production to play the house was "The Band Wagon," in 1932.

And now you drive in and the man gives you a ticket for your automobile for a moderate fee.

What's the world coming to?

At least, what is the theatrical world coming to?

So that twin contest we told you about is being altered slightly in the matter of rules and regulations.

Loew's Palace Theater announces that requirements are being sufficiently relaxed to make possible the competition of an ill-male twinship. Originally it was planned to reward the first pair of twins born in or near the National Capital during the engagement of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization of "Rose Marie," who would be christened Rose and Marie, if girls, and Nelson and Jeanette, if boy and girl. Nelson Eddy and Jeanette MacDonald are the singing stars of the film who made such a hit in the same company's filmization of Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta."

Now if boy twins should come along first, and be named Nelson and Woody—Woody Van Dyke was the director—they would be eligible to compete for the $25 that will be deposited in a bank to their credit and the choice of either a twin stroller—whatever that is—or double carriage to be given to the parents by the Lansburgh Department Store.

And if there are no twins?

Lederer Will Sing.

Picture-goers have a unique treat in store, when Pickford-Lasky's first production, "One Rainy Afternoon," reaches the screen this spring, for it will reveal a new Francis Lederer to them—one who sings for the first time in his film career.

But that does not mean that Lederer is a vocal neophyte, for he originally came into popular favor in musical comedy abroad. After serving an apprenticeship in standard and classical drama, on the stage in Prague—capital of his native Czechoslovakia—Lederer went in for operetta, and to this day it continues to be one of his favorite forms of dramatic expression.

Played Many Countries.

Going to London, the naive Czechoslovak made his first appearance away from home in a light opera called "Meet My Sister." The acclaim he won in that engagement brought him one of the best roles in the London production of "The Cat and the Fiddle." Then he crossed over to Berlin to appear in "Wonderbar," produced by Prof. Max Reinhardt. Following that, Lederer came to New York to do "Autumn Crocus," his biggest stage success.

"I like music very much—who doesn't?" commented Francis Lederer on the "One Rainy Afternoon" set at United Artists studios, the other afternoon. "Hence, I am looking forward to singing the delightful song, 'One Rainy Afternoon,' by Ralph Erwin, from which the picture takes its name.

"A lilting song provides such a fine way to give added zest to one's performance, if it is actually a part of the story, as it is in this case. Those who saw 'The Cat and the Fiddle' will know what I mean."

To Feature Music.

All Pickford-Lasky productions will utilize music, wherever it can be made a part of the plot structure logically, and thereby enhancing the entertainment value of the production.

Music being the nearest approach to an international language among all civilized peoples, both Miss Pickford and Mr. Lasky believe its more intelligent application to the screen can be made to enlarge the appeal of motion pictures.

It is interesting to recall that Mr. Lasky entered the theater profession after having tooted a cornet in a band and served an early vaudeville novitiate as producer of musical girl acts for the two-a-day, back in the old days when vaudeville was vaudeville. He should know.

With the opening of Katharine Cornell's production of Bernard Shaw's "Saint Joan" in Detroit tonight, Guthrie McClintock, who staged the play, will end his season's work. It has been a notable year for him, as he has directed five outstanding dramas since last September—Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," Maxwell Anderson's "Winterset," Elsa Schauffler's "Parnell," Edith Wharton's "Ethan Frome" and Shaw's "Saint Joan."

Casual Observation Note.

From contemplation of recent weather conditions in the National Capital, one is almost persuaded that Washington can boast its own winter-set.

Incidentally, the play will be along to the National stage a little later.

Culpeper Republicans Plan District Parley

Special Dispatch to The Post

Culpeper, Va., Feb. 11.—A meeting of the Eighth District Republican executive committee will be held February 18, at the municipal building in Culpeper to set a time and place for the Eighth District convention, Chairman W. E. Trusler announced yesterday.

The convention will nominate a candidate for Congress and elect two delegates and two alternates to the National convention in Cleveland, June 9. A district chairman, two vice-chairmen and members of the State election committee will be elected, and a Presidential elector for the Eighth District will be named.

Seem as Petrified as the Forest

When the film version of Robert E. Sherwood's "The Petrified Forest" opens on the screen of the Earle Theater on Friday, Bette Davis and Leslie Howard—who were together to fine effect in "The Animal Kingdom"—will be seen in this apparently apprehensive and precarious situation. They seem to be in difficulties. The picture has been hailed as an exceptionally faithful transcription of a New York stage hit by the same author whose 'Idiots' Paradise" soon will be seen on the stage of the National Theater.

Piano numbers by Sandoval, Larregla, Jensen and Johann Strauss-Gruenfeld.

Nino Martini's admirers, numbering a goodly host, had a very enjoyable time last evening in the generous company of the young tenor from the Metropolitan Opera. They welcomed him tumultuously, applauded his every song with enthusiasm, recalled him repeatedly, and were rewarded with encores of sundry kinds, including "La donn' e mobile" and the theme song from "Here's to Romance." It was one of those occasions which demonstrate the meaning of popularity in its expansive and uncritical aspect.

Mr. Martini was in excellent voice, his tone resonant and firm, his phrasing equably supported on the breath. His graces of portamento, his accuracy of attack, his vibrant and open-throated fortes, and his ability to spin out a pianissimo were continually in evidence. His opening group in the strict style of Donaudy and Handel was artistically delivered.

Deserving as he is of commendation for his merits, he is still separated from the perfection of artistry by a flaw or two. The gravest of these is his indistinct articulation. Where one would expect a crisp and carrying diction, one had to strain to catch many syllables retained in his throat. In the metaphor of everyday speech, he has the habit of swallowing his words. Because of this lack of verbal clarity, his Italian, French and Spanish were scarcely distinguishable one from the other.

Neither has he yet learned to differentiate with sufficient sharpness between the subtle shades of lyricism. There is not enough variation between his treatment of a dramatic aria and a simple song, and the result is a certain monotony of production. The basis of this, one surmises, is a naivete which finds confidence in routine.

Science Group to Hunt Rare California Bat

Los Angeles, Feb. 11 (AP).—Capt. G. Allan Hancock, patron of science, announced today he will leave Friday in search of a rare bat, said to frequent the Isla Patrica, in the Gulf of California. A party of scientists will accompany him on the exploration cruiser Velero III.

Specimens of various kinds will be collected for the Smithsonian Institution, the University of Southern California, the Los Angeles Museum and the Scripps Institution of Ocaenography.

Dr. Waldo Schmitt, curator of invertebrates of the Smithsonian Institution, at the last moment cancelled his plans to go on the cruise, but outlined a project which other scientists will carry out. For years he has been scientific chief of such expeditions.

Burton Holmes Concludes His Tuesday Talks

Ends Capital Season With Intimate Description of Ethiopia.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"ETHIOPIA." Fifth and final of a series of Tuesday afternoon travelogues delivered in the National Theater at 4:30 p. m. Illustrated with colored "still" views and motion pictures by Burton Holmes and Margaret Holmes. Coloring by Mildred Petry; motion pictures photographed by Andre La Varre; projection by Merritt M. Mitchell.

Picturesquely garbed in the colorful costume of the aristocratic Ethiopian, presented to him by Emperor Haile Selassie, King of Kings, Burton Holmes yesterday afternoon in the National Theater closed his series of travelogues for this season by repeating the interesting and witty lecture on Ethiopia which only a few weeks ago he presented to an audience of 4,200 under the auspices of the National Geographic Society.

This is one of Mr. Holmes' best subjects. While it embodies frequent recrudescences of the talk he delivered several years ago, immediately following the coronation of Haile Selassie, it also embraces much that is new, fresh, novel and diverting.

Starts From New York.

The journey, of course, begins in New York, proceeds to Rome for necessary passport visas, re-embarks from Genoa, proceeds through the Suez Canal and eventually arrives at Djigouti, seaport of French Somaliland, next door neighbor of Ethiopia.

Once in Abyssinia, the talk devotes itself to the customs, archaic civilization, primitive form of living and semi-barbaric practices of a strange and, to the Western mind, incomprehensible race, who still are living in the dark ages.

Intimate scenes were shown of Addis Ababa, the regal splendor in which the "Lion of Judah" lives and the utter squalor in which a majority of his subjects exist—city, suburban and remote country communities pictured with an unassailable fidelity, although many of the views harked back to the period of the coronation and may not be an absolutely accurate depiction of present-day conditions. With the war on, conditions probably are worse now than they were then.

War Is Ignored.

No part of the talk took on any of the aspects of a political or martial oration. The war was completely shunned.

Toward the end of the recital, several reproductions of quaint examples of Ethiopian "art" were shown, each as crude as the scrawled pictorial representations on the ancient walls of the sarcophagi of the Pharoahs.

Throughout the length of his illuminating discourse, the speaker was glib and consistently interlarded his remarks with shafts of wit that aroused his auditors to a high pitch of amusement.

It is to be hoped that next year's talks will be as good and the patronage of them infinitely better.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Watching Them Make Pictures.

Hollywood, Feb. 10.

On the set of "Petticoat Fever," Myrna Loy and Reginald Owen are playing a scene for Director George Fitzmaurice, but there, is a man, with an intense look, sitting on a stool, and he seems to be directing the flicker. Director Fitzmaurice says: "Myrna, you came in through the door too fast on that line. Do it again." The man on the stool says: "Count four before you open the door. Then step in. Be surprised." Miss Loy and Mr. Owen are too far away to hear the young man, but he watches to see how they will play the scene now. I ask who the young man is. I am told he is a visitor and am introduced to him. He is Clifford Odets.

Ever since he became the "red-haired boy" of the theater, Hollywood has been waiting for Odets. They have tried to lure him, as they do all talent, but Clifford ignored the advances. His answer to the movies was, "Mr. Odets regrets." And now, here he was in Hollywood, and directing a picture from the bench.

Odets and I stayed on this set, then we went to other sets. We toured the studio and we talked and talked. Odets liked Hollywood. "It's like Atlantic City. I can't help feeling that I'm in Atlantic City. I thought the place would be like one big hotel. It isn't as I pictured it. Say, I met Jean Harlow. She's young, isn't she? I mean, she doesn't look as mature as she does on the screen. Maybe it's the stories they give her. Say, she's just a baby." Odets' voice sounds dramatic. He often sounds like a section of his play being read aloud. Being with him you are conscious of force.

* * * *

Odets explained that he didn't come to Hollywood for a movie job. "I could have had that in New York." He went on to say he would write for the movies if he got the right offer. "I'd like to work on a scenario for six or eight weeks, a story that I liked. Take one that's got them stuck, and show them that I can lick it."

He was very impressed with the fine houses of his friends. He said that he got on a train because he wanted to get a rest. And who should board that train later but the San Carlos Opera troupe. Odets didn't get the desired rest. "I was going to get off in Arizona late one night. The conductor warned me not to get off. Said they were having trouble with hoboes there. He didn't know that I was a friend of the hobo."

Odets says he is going to work on his new play while here. It is called "Over My Dead Body." The play is about a state of war in an industrial town. "The bosses are at war. Lovers are at war. Fathers and mothers are at war. There is also a drought."

He told a movie producer he was writing the play. The producer said: "I'll buy the title. I can use it for a picture I've got. Odets was surprised. The producer didn't care to hear about the play; all he wanted was the title. Odets refused to sell the title. He said: "I can use it for a play I've got.

"What's all this talk about me being a radical?" asked Odets. "I'm antiwar and antifascism and if that's radical then there's millions like me." Odets expressed a desire to meet Shirley Temple. What seemed like one of those "impossible interviews"—Clifford Odets and Shirley Temple—will take place. All things are possible in Hollywood.

* * * *

The "Noah's Ark" sequence is being filmed for the flicker, "The Green Pastures." This scene is a good example of how the presentation of the picture will differ from the play. An ark has been built on the set, while on the stage the small set merely gave the suggestion of the ark. The sets in the picture will be realistic.

And on the stage they spoke of the animals Noah put on his ark; they couldn't be shown at every performance, of course. Director Marc Connelly and William Keighley were trying to instruct camels and horses and other animals how to parade toward the ark and stay in the path of the camera. Anyway, the directors were trying to instruct the owners of the animals, which was as difficult. The scene is evidence that everything that was talked about in the play is to be seen.

The animals started toward "Noah's Ark." Director Connelly shouted, "Rain," and there was rain. The technician turned the faucet and the sprinkler sprouted. The flood was on.

Another day and another scene. This is "De Lawd's office." Rex Ingram, playing the role of De Lawd, is talking to Gabriel, played by Oscar Polk. Directors Connelly and Keighley are ready to shoot the scene when the still photographer on the set, Cliff Kling, interrupts. He whispers to Director Connelly. Kling races away. He returns with a still photograph, a copy of the set and the characters at yesterday's shooting. Gabriel's hair is different. He admits that last night he went down to Central avenue and got himself a fancy haircut. Shooting is delayed until the make-up man pastes hair on Gabriel. He can't be standing in the picture and suddenly flash on the screen with a fancy haircut.

Herd Tests Given In 11 Md. Counties

Baltimore, Feb. 11 (AP).—Herds of cattle in 11 Maryland counties have been given accredited ratings so far this year—in tuberculosis tests conducted by the State Livestock Sanitary Commission, co-operating with the Federal Bureau of Animal Industry.

Dr. E. B. Symonds, Federal inspector in charge of tuberculosis eradication in Maryland and Delaware, added Howard and Anne Arundel counties to the list today. Counties previously inspected and accredited were St. Marys, Charles, Calvert, Queen Annes, Kent, Cecil, Talbot, Allegany and Garrett.

Dr. Mark F. Welsh, State veterinarian, said he expected herds in all 23 counties of the State will have undergone inspection by June 1. To secure an accredited rating, tests must show that not more than one-half of 1 per cent of the cattle within a county are tubercular.

Last year, he said, only sixtenths of 1 per cent of all the cattle in the State showed traces of tuberculosis.

Driver's Neck Broken As Train Hits Truck

Special Dispatch to The Post

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 11.—Roy E. Spielman, Hopewell, Pa., sustained a broken neck and is in a critical condiliton at the Waynesboro Hospital after his coal truck was struck by a Western Maryland freight train at the Waynecastle crossing. The truck was carried over 1,000 feet down the track.

Lieut. E. J. Chapman, of the railroad police department, said Spielmar drove his truck around a passenger car that had stopped at the crossing, and proceeded across the track.

Road Plans Held Up By Rights of Way

Special Dispatch to The Post

Frederick, Md., Feb. 11.—In a letter to David C. Winebrenner 3d, Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture and chairman of the Washington-Gettysburg Memorial Highway Commission, said inability to get rights of way of sufficient width through towns and cities along routes 240 and 15 is the chief problem of the committee.

The commission, set up by Congress last year, is studying a possible route for a super highway linking the Lincoln Memorial in Washington with the Gettysburg battlefield.

Organizations here advocate following present route 240 through the Monocacy battlefield. A route along the old C. & O. Canal, from Georgetown to Dickerson, thence along the Monocacy River to the battlefield at Frederick Junction, and then following route 240 to Gettysburg, is being considered.

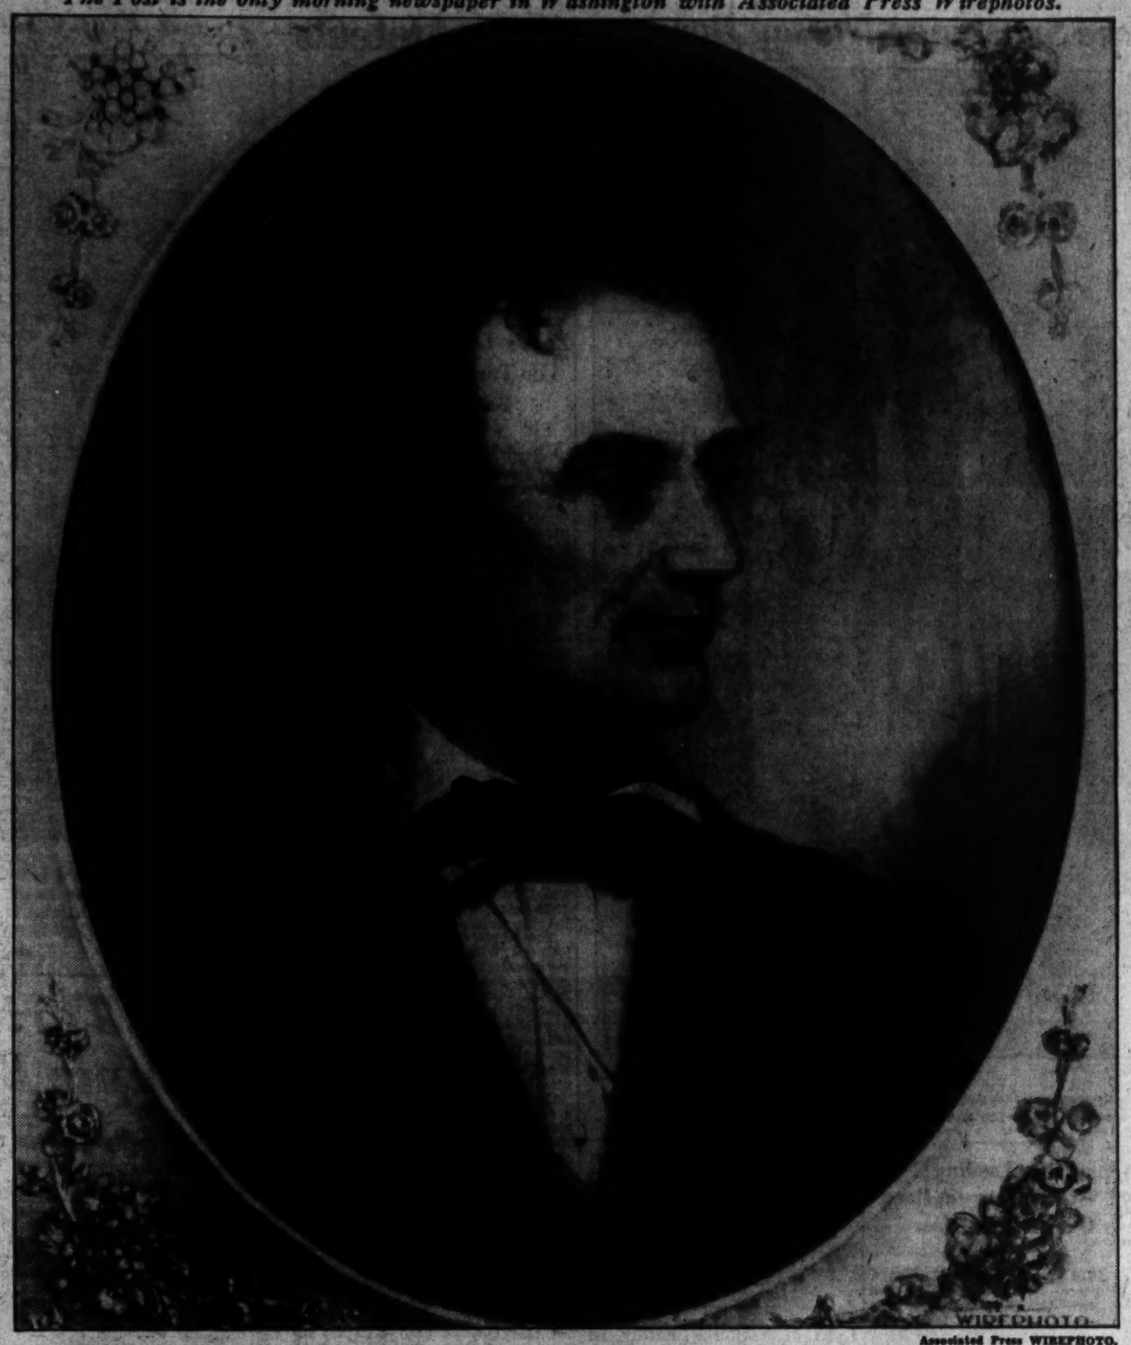
Rare Lincolniana Unearthed

The Post is the only morning newspaper in Washington with Associated Press Wirephotos.



Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

NEW LINCOLNIANA.—With the Nation celebrating the birthday of Abraham Lincoln today, there come to light two important items of Lincolniana, published here for the first time. Above is an oil painting executed in 1860 by Thomas Hicks soon after Lincoln was nominated as Republican Presidential candidate. To the left and right is reproduced the long-lost manuscript of the address Lincoln delivered November 10, 1864, at celebration of his re-election. It was discovered in bank vault in Dryden, N. Y., by WPA writers.

It has long been a grave question whether any government not too strong for the liberties of its people can be strong enough to maintain its own existence in great emergencies.

On this point the present rebellion brought our republic to a severe test; and a presidential election occurring in regular course during the rebellion added not a little to the strain. If the loyal people unitedly were put to the utmost of their strength by the rebellion, must they not fail when divided, and partially paralyzed, by a political war among themselves?

But the election was a necessity. We can not have free government without elections; and if the rebellion could force us to forego or postpone a national election, it might fairly claim to have already conquered and ruined us. The strife of the election is but human nature practically applied to the facts of the case. What has occurred in this case must ever recur in similar cases. Human nature will not change. In any future great national trial, compared with the new of this, we shall have as weak, and as strong; as silly and as wise; as bad and as good. Let us, therefore, study the incidents of this, as philosophy to learn wisdom from, and not as wrongs to be revenged.

But the election, along with its accidental and undesirable strife, has done good, too. It has demonstrated that a people's government can sustain a national election, in the midst of a great civil war. Until now it has not been known to the world that this was a possibility. It shows also how strong, and how strong we still are. It shows that, even among candidates of the same party, he who is most devoted to the Union, and most opposed to treason, can receive most of the people's votes. It shows also, to the extent yet known, that we have more men now, than we had when the war began. Gold is good in its place; but living, brave patriotic men, are better than gold.

But the rebellion continues; and now that the election is over, may not all, having a common interest, reunite in a common effort to save our common country? For my own part I have striven, and shall strive to avoid placing any obstacle in the way. So long as I have been here I have not willingly planted a thorn in any man's bosom.

While I am deeply sensible to the high compliment of a re-election, and duly grateful, as I trust, to Almighty God for having directed my countrymen to a right conclusion, as I think, for their own good, it adds nothing to my satisfaction that any other man may be disappointed or pained by the result.

May I ask those who have not differed with me, to join with me, in this same spirit toward those who have?

And now, let me close by asking three hearty cheers for our brave soldiers and seamen and their gallant and skilful commanders.

Generals Win 11th Game In Row

Foul Called, Buscher Misses Free Throw as Game Ends.

Old Liner Registers 16 Points, Shares Honors With Spessard.

WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY'S crack basketball team ran its consecutive victory string to 11 and kept its top undefeated ranking in the Southern Conference by nosing out the University of Marylad, 55 to 54, in a hair-raising battle before 2,000 spectators at Ritchie Coliseum last night.

The Generals staved off a desperate rally by the Old Liners that nearly gave the hosts victory. With Washington and Lee leading, 55 to 49, with three minutes to play, Al Waters dropped in a floor goal and Knocky Thomas two double-deckers to bring the count to 55-54.

At this point Referee Enright called a technical foul on Coach Cy oung, of the Generals, for coming out on the floor to protest a decision. Buscher tried the free toss, the ball rolling the hoop and dropping out. The gun barked a moment later.

Generals Take Lead.

W. and L. started the game with a rush, rolling up a 19-to-5 lead in the first ten minutes. Maryland rallied to tie the count at 21-21, and twice later the score was knotted at 22-all and 24-all. The Generals, however, forged ahead again and at half time held a 32-to-24 advantage.

Maryland never was able to overhul the eventual victors in the second half, the Generals managing to keep just a few points ahead all the way.

Big Bob Spessard, W. and L. 6-foot 7 center, was a continual threat t othe Old inerLs under the basket. He tallied six floor goals and four fouls for 16 points, to share honors with Buscher, who also scored 16 points.

Waters, of Maryland, and Joe Pette and Uorm Iler, All-Southern guards, also were big scorers, each with 11 points.

Here Are Answers To Trick Questions

(Below are given the answers to the brain-twisters given in the story in yesterday's Post about the new game that is being played around Joe Turner's office.)

1. The change is one 50-cent piece, one quarter and four dimes.
2. There are four dogs walking in single file.
3. It will take the train two minutes to go through the tunnel.
4. One hundred eggs; they are 1 cent apiece.
5. The four-gallon can is filled and emptied into the three-gallon can, leaving one gallon. The three-gallon can then is emptied and the one gallon is poured into it. Then the four-gallon can is filled and you have five gallons—four in the full can and one in the three-gallon can.
6. This one is hardly fair. It took only ONE stone to FINISH the monument.
7. It takes the frog 27 jumps to get out of the well. On the last jump, he is just 3 feet from the top, he makes it and doesn't slip back.
8. Multiply the number selected by 9, then multiply the larger number by that one.
9. One must sell 94 50-cent tickets, 5 $10 tickets and 1 $3 ticket.
10. One has 10 eggs and the other 14 eggs.

Gonzaga Easily Wins Over St. Paul's Five

The Gonzaga basketball team scored its most impressive victory of the season yesterday in the Eye street gym, trouncing St. Paul's, 17 to 13. Johnny Lowe, of the winners, easily captured individual honors with an even dozen points.

Held to a 9-to-8 lead at half-time, Coach Orrel Mitchell's charges went on a wild scoring spree at the same time keeping the visitors scoreless until well into the final period.

Big Drop Taken By Ring Title Market

Risko Earns Only $868 for Defending Crown in Newark Bout.

By Alan Gould

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—Pugilism's one-man boom, featuring Jarring Joe Louis, has been accompanied by no upward trend in fistic championship stock. If anything, the bottom has just about dropped out of the title market, for the time being.

Kicked around by pompous proclamations, questionable match-making and artful dodging during the past few years, ring championships have dwindled in value as well as prestige. Added to the all-time lows today is the official report that Eddie (Babe) Risko, holder of the American middleweight title, emerged with $868 as his portion of a $2,287 "gate" for a title match in Newark.

This emphasizes that a fistic crown no longer is an attraction in itself. The fans first want to be convinced they are going to get some excitement, including a few knockdown wallops, for their money.

The hint that Joe Louis, if he disposes of Max Schmeling in June, will not be eager to fight Jim Braddock for the heavyweight title in September is prompted by the slump in title values. In other words, the Negro's board of strategy may feel he has more to gain, financially, by putting off a bid for the crown until 1937. They figure that Louis, as titleholder, would find his activities limited by the circumstances, politics and intrigues which always seem to involve a heavyweight king.

Not Apprehensive.

Regardless of anything you may read to the contrary, the idea of postponing a prospective title match with Louis or trying to find a substitute opponent is not to the liking of Braddock and his manager, Joe Gould. Braddock, whatever his chances may be against the Brown Bomber, is not apprehensive. Moreover, Jersey Jim and his pilot know it's the one man which will mean financial security for all concerned in the title holder's camp.

It's an even-money bet right now that Louis and Braddock will fight for the title early in the fall. The current jockeying for position, with sound effects, is so much ballyhoo.

One Other Argument.

Meanwhile, there's only one other title argument in prospect hereabouts. Jock McAvoy, the battering Briton, has signed to meet John Henry Lewis, Arizona Negro, who holds the American light-heavy title, but Madison Square Garden doesn't know when it will be staged and doesn't seem to care.

Tony Canzoneri, the veteran lightweight king, has passed up a return championship match with Lou Ambers, the Herkimer Hurricane, in preference for a bout with Jimmy McLarnin.

Risko, who made the mistake of going out of his class to fight McAvoy and got flattened, now proposes going to the other extreme by fighting Barney Ross, the welter champion.

The main purpose in this would give Ross the chance to become a double champion again. Barney beat McLarnin for the welter title at a time when he also occupied the lightweight throne. The first obstacle to this is Risko's demand for a $30,000 guarantee. The other obstacles are uninmportant.

Oyster Bay Leading Field of Nine Boats in Race Over Rough Seas.

ABOARD U. S. Coast Guard patrol boat Pandora, at sea, Feb. 11.—Out to better her own record, Vadim S. Makaroff's big mahogany ketch Vamarie scurried along in choppy seas today well in the van of nine other boats sailing race.

in the third annual Miami-Nassau

The 72-foot Oyster Bay, Long Island, entry, which won the 1934 inaugural in 30:38:39, profited by brisk northerly breezes to pick up and pass, one by one, five boats which led her across the line at 11:45 a. m. (E. S. T.)

Twenty miles from the start she was 2 miles ahead of the Winsome Too, 64-foot staysail ketch owned by Harkness Edwards, of the New York Yacht Club.

Hard after the Winsome Too came the 49-foot schooner Water Witch, owned by C. A. Hansen, of the Shore Acres Yacht Club, Mamaroneck, N. Y., and the 58-foot staysail schooner Venturer, owned by Edmund Spence, of the Clearwater, Fla., Yacht Club, which carried the hopes of Gulf Coast yachtsmen.

The list of 14 entries was cut to 10 as three craft failed to start and one, the 58-foot yawl Mischief, owned by Clarence Moore, of Port Washington, Long Island, turned back toward Miami in the rough seas.

W. & M. Five Defeats Wake Forest, 41-30

Williamsburg, Va., Feb. 11 (AP).—William and Mary defeated Wake Forest, 41 to 30, here tonight in a basketball game which saw the lead change hands frequently until the Indians spurted safely ahead just before the final whistle.

The W. and M. quint went quickly into the lead to hold a 9-point edge after eight minutes of play, but the Deacons came from behind to lea dthe home team, 19 to 16, at the half.

Schultz, Former Auto Speed Demon, Is Dead

Colorado Springs, Feb. 11 (AP).—Glenn Schultz, one-time auto racing hero of the Rocky Mountain region who had been barred from the streets of his home city, died today after a long illness.

Schultz was a steady winner of the Pikes Peak Labor Day climb until his skill deserted him.

After a series of traffic accidents he was barred from piloting a car here.

Coach Dawson Departs For New Tulane Post

Minneapolis, Feb. 11 (AP).—Lowell (Red) Dawson, newly-appointed football coach at Tulane, and his assistants, Glenn Seidel and Bill Devan, former Minnesota grid stars, planned tonight to depart for New Orleans Thursday morning. Severe weather has delayed their motor trip to the Louisiana city.

Seidel said they expected to arrive at Tulane in time to shape practice plans early next week.

Jackets Down American U., 48 to 22

Lyle McFall Is Leader in Devastating Attack With 18 Points.

RANDOLPH-MACON'S basket shooters shot up American University's Eagles, 48 to 23, last night at the A. U. gymnasium. The Virginians were led by a high-scoring forward named Lyle McFall, who came within five points of scoring as many points as the entire American team.

Randolph-Macon took a 15-12 lead in the first half and bettered the 2-to-1 advantage in the last two periods. Len Harris, of Massachusetts, led what American scoring resistance there was. The Bay State basketer snagged 12 points.

The Yellow Jackets plucked the Eagles almost as cleanly as they did on the gridiron last fall when they swamped the American grid forces by an overwhelming margin. For American it may be said the Virginia team is one of the stronger small college fives in the South.

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, Feb. 11.—R. A. Coward, Texas turfman, today gave $500 to the mother and stepfather of Homer Spears, apprentice jockey killed in a four-horse spill at the Fairgrounds here yesterday. Coward donated the purse of $390 won by his 3-year-old filly, Royal Image, in the second race. He added the regular $10 jockey fee together with $100 he had promised Spears for riding ulia Grant to victory in the New Orleans Handicap Saturday and gave the money to Mr. and Mrs. Barney Weitz, the pockey's parents.

Francis Polk, 18, leading local jockey, who was critically hurt in the same spill, regained consciousness today, but was not considered out of danger.

G. U. Defeats West Va. In Overtime

Hoyas Triumph, 42-36, After Tying 32-All in Last 40 Seconds.

Zola's Long Shot Keeps His Team in Running; Bassin Shines.

COMING from behind to tie the score at 32-all in the last 40 seconds of the regulation game, Georgetown outscored a smart West Virginia quintet in the extra five-minute period to win a thrilling 42-36 victory last night at Tech High School.

A throng of 2,500 fans saw the Hoyas chalk up their second Eastern Conference victory of the season. It was a costly defeat for the Mountaineers, as it knocked them out of a tie for second place with Temple. It also was the third overtime conference game played at Tech this winter and Georgetown's second victory in such.

Coming out for the second half, West Virginia showed a vast improvement over the first period and handled the ball in an expert fashion that kept Georgetown back on its heels throughout most of the period. With Mistrovic showing the way the visitors soon prodded their advantage to 23-17, and then 25-19, and then 30-22 as the Hoyas struggled desperately but futily to close the gap between the two.

The Hoyas' cause seemed to be a lost one with West Virginia keeping possession of the ball over the greater portion of the period, but Bassin injected new hope into the proceedings with a lay-up shot on a pass from Nolan and Petroskey followed suit. When Don Gibeau converted a foul it was 30-26 in West Va.'s favor with but two minutes of play left.

Colebank sank a foul, but it was a double and Gibeau converted on his end. Then Petroskey put the Hill Toppers within reach of their opponents with another snowbird. Colebank temporarily interrupted this rally with another foul shot, but again it was Gibeau sinking a charity shot that evened the count in this respect.

Forty seconds—even less—remained as Ben Zola grabbed the ball in a melee near the West Va. basket. He started down the floor dribbling at a breakneck pace. Somebody yelled "shoot" and without slacking his pace Zola let it go from middle court. It went through without touching, tying the score at 32-all.

Zola gave his team another push as the extra period opened, but the man behind the big gun was Harry Bassin, who converted two fouls and sank two pretty baskets that definitely sealed the Mountaineers' fate.

Take Early Lead.

Using the fanciest passing attack seen on a district court this winter, the Mountaineers forged ahead to a 4-2 lead on field goals by Colebank and Gocke, after Don Gibeau's field goal had staked his mate to a 2-0 advantage. Harry Bassin's pot shot tied it up, but West Virginia again took the lead on a foul shot by Andy Mestrovic. But Bassin and Zola retaliated with field goals and Georgetown soon coasting along at an easy pace with a comfortable advantage. Bassin and Johnny Frank, substituting for Gibeau, set the pace, with Zola and Petroskey helping at various times.

West Virginia's passing attack failed to baffle the complacent Georgetown quintet and the visitors were forced to resort to long shots for their points. The Hill Toppers boasted a 16-11 lead when West Virginia hit its true stride, and this melted like a snowman in a baker's oven in the face of a 19-minute rally.

Gocke, Colebank and Phares sank field goals in the last two minutes of the first half that erased the home team's advantage and gave West Virginia a 17-16 advantage at the intermission.

Army Is Helpless to Combat Ticket Scalpers, Report Says

By the Associated Press.

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY authorities were described by Maj. Gen. William D. Connor in a report to Congress made public yesterday as "helpless" to combat ticket scalping at the annual Army-Navy football games.

The statement of the West Point superintendent was made to a comment appropriation bill.

mitte estudying the War Depart-

"The Supreme Cour tof New York recently decided that when a person sells a commodity to a second person, the second person is absolutely free to dispose of it as he chooses. So I think we are helpless," the General said.

Several times in past years Congressmen have called attention to the scalping practices in the service classic.

Most of the tickets are sold to members of the athletic associations of the two academies, but Connor said 9,600 tickets were sold to the University of Pennsylvania. A $25,000 retnal fee also is paid the university to rthe use of Franklin Field, Philadelphia.

He said the tickets were sold to the university because it had season contracts with individuals to be filled.

"At times all the tickets are not in demand and we are then glad for Pennsylvania to buy the tickets from us at the current price," he said, adding a somewhat similar arrangement was made with Yankee Stadium for New York games.

Connor told the committee that consideration had been given to holding the game at Philadelphia's Municipal Stadium, which seats some 30,000 more than Franklin Field.

"If we built a stadium in Washington, * * *, you could have a place to play each year without expense, could you not?" a committeeman asked.

"Yes, but I am afraid I would feel it was not the wise thing to do," Connor replied.

Spills, Thrills Feature Olympic Bobsledding

By Paul Gallico.

GARMISCH-PARTENKIRCHE, Feb. 11.—Today was the most dramatic of this three-ring winter circus, beginning at sunrise on the Riesseree and ending at darkness. Then peaks were rose-capped as the red sun struck the snow covered tops. The moon set at the same time.

It was bitterly cold on the mountain-side waiting for the blue-lighting men—the four-men bobbers—to start the series of terrifying runs against time and death.

Promptly at 8 o'clock three guinea pig, non-competitive bobs were run down the course in trials. The third bob, German manned, crashed off Bavaria curve; that spot which was a dreadful man trap all day. Two members of the crew were sent to a hospital. Next down was the America bob, driven by Francis Tyler, as Donna Fox, the Bronx undertaker, had withdrawn on account of injuries. The Americans made fair time.

Bavaria Curve Again.

The Czecho-Slovakian crew was next on the heart-failure ride. They hti the top of the Bavaria curve wall and came down again on the opposite bank, miraculously regaining control of the bob.

Everyone was terrified at the curious disaster of the French crew. They hit the curve too high and skidded, losing the brake man 20 yards down the run. He was uninjured.

J. Hubert Stevens' American team, on the way down in fine time, caught the wall of Bavaria curve, struck the opposite side of the straightaway and slid thirty yards along the wall. The crew shoved off with their hands. They were lucky not to spill, but lost precious seconds.

By a strange coincidence the first and second American bobs made exactly the same time. The first run was made in 1:25.61 minutes.

A Comic Smash-up.

The German bob was in a comic smash-up. Though lucky off the dangerous Bavaria curve, they took off the wall too soon and hit the right bank. Coming down they all spilled out on the run. The sled continued merrily on. The Ger-

O'Mahony Sued For $15,215; 'Ran Out'

Manager Also Is Named in Texan's Action; 'Title' Vacant.

By the Associated Press.

GALVESTON, Tex., Feb. 11.—Wrestling Champion Danno O'Mahony was sued for $15,215 today for allegedly running out on a match.

The former Irish guardsman's manager, Jack McGrath, also was named in the action, filed by Promoter Ralph Hammonds, one-time Olympic wrestling star and former University of Texas football player.

Hammonds said O'Mahony caused him "that much grief" when he failed to appear Saturday night for a match with Juan Humberto, Mexican wrestler, here.

The promoter set forth that he had entered into an agreement with O'Mahony whereby the champion would risk his belt in the Humberto match. The champion appeared—but suddenly disappeared before the main event—Hammonds said.

Considerable Expense.

Hammonds alleged he went to considerable expense for the scheduled bout and that "for reasons unknown" the champion was not in the ring.

State Labor Commissioner Fred Nichols, who also reigns as boxing and wrestling czar, declared O'Mahony's title vacant in Texas after the nonappearance.

Hammonds claims he is due $10,000 exemplary damages, $5,000 for damages allegedly done to his reputation and $215 for ticket refunds.

O'Mahony has not commented on his failure to appear.

Flowers-Godfrey Feature Tonight

Heavies Top Colored Bouts at Turner's Arena..

Featured by a ten-round bout between Tiger Lew Flowers, erstwhile sparring partner of Joe Louis, and 220-pound Young George Godfrey, of Baltimore, an all-colored boxing card will be presented tonight at the Turner Arena under the joint auspices of Promoter John Bell and Matchmaker Billy Edwards.

Since both Flowers and Godfrey are free-swinging punchers and have several short-order knockouts to their credti, an enthusiastic slugfest seems inevitable.

Meyer Rowan, promising lightweight, has drawn as his semi-final opponent, young Harry Wills, a fellow Baltimorean. The bout is scheduled for eight rounds. In a specific featherweight match, slated for 6 rounds, K. O. Clark will square off with Willie Green.

Preliminary hostilities involve Johnny Snowden and Kid Hughey in one 4-rounder and Jim Lamar and Sammy Williams in the other. Bell time has been set for 8:30 p. m.

U. S. Scores First Points In Games

Takes Fourth Place in Standings as Skaters Finish in Race.

Hockeyists Beat Czechs; Bob-Sledders Off to Flying Start.

By the United Press.

GARMISCH-PARTENKIRCHEN, Germany, Feb. 11.—Carried to their first points of the games on the flashing blades of three speed-skaters, America's snow and ice athletes today enjoyed their most successful session since competition in the fourth winter Olympic games began.

The skaters—Leo Freisinger, Delbert Lamb and Allan Potts—moved the stars and stripes into fourth place in the unofficial team standings with 6½ points by finishing among the first six in the 500-meter (547 yards) race which was won by Ivar Ballangrud, of Norway.

In winning his first title since he captured the 5,000-meter event in 1928, Ballangrud equaled the Olympic record of 43.4 seconds set by Jack Shea, of America, in 1932 at Lake Placid.

Freisinger Is Third.

Freisinger, 19-year-old Chicago youth, finished third behind Georg Krog, of Norway, gaining four points for the United States. Shetzo Ishihara, of Tokyo, was fourth, followed by Delbert Lamb, of Milwaukee. Allan Potts, of Brooklyn, who holds the unofficial world record for 500 meters and who was expected to turn in the best American performance, finished in a tie for sixth with Karl Leban, of Austria.

On the bob-run and ice hockey rink, American performers met success equal to that of the speed skaters.

The blue-clad Puck Pounders, almost eliminated in the opening round, whipped Czechoslovakia, 2 to 0, in their first game of the semifinal round. The Americans scored twice in the second period to hand the Czechs their first defeat in four Olympic starts.

Canada Is Upset.

In a semifinal round match of the other four-team division, Great Britain scored the games' first major upset by humbling Canada, 2-to-1, tonight. It was the first defeat for the Canadians who had been favored to go undefeated and win their fourth straight Olympic title.

In other matches, Sweden defeated Austria, 1-to-0, and Germany halted Hungary, 2 to 1.

The bobbers, defending titles won in 1932, moved off to a flying start in defense of the four-man title despite the fact that their No. 1 team finished fifth in total elapsed time for two runs down the treacherous Mount Gudiberg course.

In Tenth Position.

The No. 2 American sled ended in tenth position. Even so, the red, white and blue cause is far from being hopeless because only 3.65 seconds separate the first team from Switzerland's No. 1 aggregation which turned in the best time of any of the 19 sleds representing 10 nations.

Competition in the four-man event will end tomorrow when each team makes two more runs. The outfit with the fastest elapsed time for the four descents will win the title.

The American No. 2 team, piloted by Francis Tyler, of Lake Placid, almost had a spill as it came down a moment after the Italians crashed. The American sled struck the hole

A. A. U. Cage Teams Warned to File Entries by Friday Night

Record Entry Seen For Tourney

Teams Prepare for Big Games at Heurich; Open on Tuesday.

A WARNING to teams in Washand vicinity to file their registrations and entries by midnight Friday was sounded last night by the District A. A. U. basketball committee, which met at the Y. M. C. A. to wind up all unfinished business for the championship games scheduled to open next Tuesday night at Heurich's gym under the sponsorship of The Post.

"The curfew will ring Friday at midnight, and we're not accepting any entries or registrations after that," Chairman Winfree ohnson declared, making a ringing plea to all managers and team backers to "file erly" less they be sapped b ythe deadline.

All of which means that the A. A. U. officials are going to crack down on these teams which in the past have been storming in after the deadline with their entries, offering a million alibis, excuses and whatnot.

File Early, Is Plea.

"It's time these teams get educated about such things," ohnson htundered. "Why should they wait until the last minute and add to our worries?"

So, if youse basketball teams want to play in The Post's gigantic tournament, register—if you haven't already—and send in your entries today. You can do this conveniently at the Boys' Club of Washington, 230 C street northwest.

Committee members stated that The Post event had been received enthusiastically in every section of the city, and nothing short of a record-breaking entry in each class is expected.

Morris Fox, energetic director of the Police Boys' Club, reported that 11 of his teams are entering—3 in the 100 from the Fifth, Fourth and Eleventh precincts; 2 in the 115 from the Fourth and Fifth; 3 in the 130 from the Fifth, Eleventh and Fourth; 2 in the 145 from the Fifth and Fourth, and 1 in the unlimited from the Fifth Precinct.

Many Club Teams Enter.

Jan Jankowski, also of the committee, director at the Northeast Boys' Club is entering teams in four classes. Washington Boys' Club, Merrick Boys' Club, where Tom and Babe Gearty preside, and Georgetown Boys' Club will have from four to five entries.

Bernie Phillips, Y. M. C. A. representative at the meeting, who is coaching the unlimited "Y" team, a "dark horse" entry, stated that there would be some ten teams from his association.

With the bulk of teams from the Community Center Heurich and Southeast Community Center leagues, the girls' Community Center League due to enter, the tournament at this stage takes on a rosy hue—giving A. A. U. officials a world of encouragement.

All teams within a 15-mile radius of Washington may compete. Entry blanks are available at The Post, Spalding's, Treman-King, Y. M. C. A., all boys' clubs.

Amateur Stars Grace King's Line-up

BOXING FANS in Washington and vicinity will take more than passing interest in the matches Friday night at Turner's Arena between Columbus University and King College, of Bristol, Tenn.

For one thing, two former star pupils of the clever University of Virginia boxing coach, Johnny La Rowe, will be in opposite corners—Bobby Goldstein tutoring Columbus and Jeb Kelly, a Bristol attorney, the Tornado scrappers.

For another thing, two teams studded with Golden Gloves champions will be meeting.

Goldstein for three years was the "wonder boxer" of the Cavaliers, having alternated between the featherweight and lightweight classes. He wound up his career in 1933. Kelly, a rip-snorting featherweight, was a teammate of the famous Henry Lamar, a Washington boy, now coaching at Harvard. Kelly finished at Virginia 11 years ago.

Boxing is a comparatively new sport at King, having been started last year. Undefeated through 1935, the Tornadoes have scored over Hampden-Sydney and University of Tennessee this season. King's boxers defeated Hampden-Sydney, 5 to 3, all five wins being scored via knockouts.

Ray Morse, of Columbus, recent winner of the 118-pound Golden Gloves crown, and Capt. Leon Shub, undefeated 135-pounder, will oppose Capt. Lou Summers and Bill Wilkinson, of King, both unbeaten, respectively, in the feature bouts.

Country Ferguson, 135-pounder, winner of the Seaboard championship, will oppose Henry Peterson, of Columbus; Stoopy Wilkinson, National Guard champion, from King, will meet Bobby Rawson, 1935 Golden Gloves winner; Morris Wolfe, Columbus, opposes Emil Gavlock, and Steve Brubaker, 175-pounder, will tackle Johnny McKinney.

By Bill McCormick.

WHEN the boss left word that I was to write this column probably he didn't know that I'd be in one of my fine-feathered frenzies, but so it is. Nothing pleases me at the moment except the providential opportunity to use Povich's column this morning to gripe about everything. So, while the boss is away absorbing large quantities of Florida special vitamin D orange juice and Bacardi cocktails, I shall vent my spleen on his fortunate readers.

McCORMICK.

The first thing I don't like this morning is professional baseball. In the first place, personal opinion tells me that it's a lousy game to watch, although some fun to play. Why apparently sane people will holler themselves so hoarse they can haul wagons just because some big bohunk is standing at the plate waving a 36-ounce hunk of wood while nothing happens is one of life's little mystries. It can't be because those bellering are motivated by civic pride, as, bounced around from team to team as they are, professional baseballers certainly are not representative of the cities in which they happen to be making their temporary headquarters.

Baseball is grossly overplayed in the sports pages. No matter how terrible our side becomes, it apparently is an inviolable rule that the antics of the team shall be accorded top play in every sheet in town. To these jaundiced and somewhat askew eyes it seems that a seventh-rate ball club should be entitled to no better than seventh-rate play in the news.

Baseball also has a habit of creeping into the sports pages during the off-season, when the space allotted it might better be given some other sport. Frankly, I'm not a bit interested in whether Chris Krinklepuss, the star first baseman of the Keokuk Kodlaks, wants $7,162.49 a year to play with the Boston Bees, or whether he goes back to the farm where he belongs anyway. Probably many others are not interested in such trivista, but it gets the play for some reason.

Baseball magnates are, at present, spending large sum on publicity, issuing elaborate brochures on the game, distributing films on the sport and taking every possible measure to repopularize the rapidly waning sport—but the right measure. If they could forget their avariciousness long enough to make some arrangements to let kids in at a low admission charge, they might do some good. It is easy enough to incline twigs, as the old saw has it.

Baseball players, as a whole—although there are a few charming exceptions—are surely apple-knockers who wouldn't get to base No. 1 if it weren't for the publicity accorded them by solicitous sports scribes, and, who, more often than not, treat those S. S. Ss. like so much soil beneath their brogans.

Of all athletes, they are the most dependent upon publicity for their bread and butter—and least human in their relations with the fourth estate. It is nothing uncommon for a sports writer to be chased out of a locker room or off a players' bench because he has written an insignificant little thing that has offended some lug's "finer sensibilities." And the sad part of it all is that, quite frequently, the chased one purposely will write nice things about those who chased him just to put himself back in good grace.

Gnuts, in a word, to baseball.

Horse racing, as it is conducted in most spots, is something else I don't like. Not that it isn't a pleasure to watch the ponies gallop, perhaps wagering a bob here and a bob there, but the ways the tracks gyp the public is a sin and a shame.

In the first place, what conceivable reason can there be against the electric-eye method of recording finishes? If I bet two bucks of my hard-earned moneys on a race, I'd rather have a camera record the finish than three lobster-puss guys named Jake, who probably had a bet on some other nag in the same race. If the tracks have some good reason for not adopting the fool-proof method of recording finishes by camera, there certainly is no reason why they can't at least fix up the finish line so a few of the betters can be in a position to dispute a close decision—or at least see for themselves. That "you-are-at-a-different-angle" gag is becoming pretty threadbare as an excuse for putrid race-finish decisions.

If the tracks, and those that run them, were really in earnest about making racing honest, they would arrange to have every horse carefully guarded in a central paddock for several hours prior to a race. Not only that, they would have each and every horse given a saliva test after each and every race, and would permanently bar every owner, trainer and jockey convicted of wrong-doing. Something like the central paddock thing and saliva test business was, I believe, once suggested at one of the tracks but dropped instanter when many owners threatened to take their horses elsewhere if the rules were put in effect. Why should they object?

Gnuts, in a word, to horse racing.

Horse shows, or rather their conduct, are something else I am agin. Not that I don't thrill to the marrow at an exhibition of good horse flesh and not that show horses are not noble creatures. Far from it. But, who in his right senses, could approve of the fixing of "conditions" to give this dealer and that dealer a chance to boost his wares, especially in fly-by-night unrecognized shows?

Sometimes I seriously doubt the integrity of some horse show judges, but it takes years of training in the racket to absorb the knowledge necessary to prove the judges wrong—and then it still remains pretty much a matter of opinion.

Gnuts, in a word, to horse shows.

Table tennis, horse shoe pitching, boxing, tennis, golf, basketball, swimming, badminton, cricket, ice hockey, soccer and football are just a few of the other things that I don't like, but there doesn't remain space enough to explain my aversions to them.

Gnuts, in a word, to everything.

Groups in Loudoun Favor Hunting Bill

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Leesburg, Va., Feb. 11.—The two sportsmen's groups in Loudoun County, the Game and Game Fish Protective Association and the Loudoun Gun Dog Club, held a special joint session here last night and unanimously favored the bill before the Virginia General Assembly to increase the cost of hunting licenses.

The bill, sponsored by the commission on game and inland fisheries, calls for added revenue, with the extra money earmarked for the propagation of game and fish and the eventual acquisition of public hunting grounds.

County combination hunting and fishing licenses, under the bill, will remain the same—$1—but issuance will be restricted to residents of the county. Since no city in Virginia is in any county, city residents will be required to take out the $3.50 State combination hunting and fishing licenses or either the $2.50 State hunting license—only license of the State fishing—only license at $2.

This is the second time this season the two teams have met wtih St. John's coming out victorious by a margin of 12 points in the previous engagement. St. John's plays Central at Central tomorrow.

The Mount Rainier High School Girl's Team, Prince George's County champions fo rthe past two years, dropped a close game to Sherwood High on the Mount floor yesterday, 12-10. The District Line lassies have only lost two games out of 12 starts, both by the slim margin of one field goal.

Five Virginia Teams Take To Road

Courtmen to Meet V. M. I. at Lexington Tonight in Double Bill.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

UNIVERSITY, Va., Feb. 11.—Five Virginia teams are getting ready to perform away from home during the remainder of the week while one, the first year track team, is getting into shape to open its season with the only contest in the memorial gymnasium that remains on this week's sport schedule for the Cavaliers.

Tomorrow night the Cavalier varsity and first year basketball team go to Lexington for a double-header against Virginia Military Institute. The regular quintet has another game away on Friday when it travels to Lynchburg to play Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

Boxers to Travel.

Virginia's boxers have their first meeting with the University of Richmond ringmen in the mosque at Richmond on Saturday, and this is the event that is going to attract hundreds of students down to the capitol city of the Old Dominion.

Cavaliers and Spiders have never before scrapped in the ring and this meet is attracting special interest. Much of this is du eto the fact that Richmond's head coach, Russ Crane, used to bring such skilled teams here when he was fistic tutor at Mississippi State College. Though they never captured the Southern Conference title, his charges were always in th erunning and produced several individual titleholders who are well remembered by Virginia boxing followers.

May Change Line-up.

Johnny LaRowe, coach of the Cavalier boxers, is considering making several changes in the Virginia order of battle. He experimented with the team last week when V. P. I. was opposed in Blacksburg, and he may not let all these changes stand.

Virginia's varsity swimmers, who have won all three of their dual meets, go to Williamsburg to take the tank against William and Mary. The Freshman swimmers, who have yet to gain a victory, also have a meet with the W. and M. first year mermen.

The one home meet remaining on the week's card is that of the freshman track and field men against the Episcopal High School on Saturday afternoon. This team of Cavaliers is wholly new and what it can be expected to do is not known.

Richmond U.'s Star Fighter Ineligible

Tymosko, Déficient in His Studies, Won't Vie in Virginia Meet.

By the Associated Press.

RICHMOND, Feb. 11.—Frank Tymosko, University of Richmond heavyweight boxer and football star, was today declared ineligible to compete with the ring team against Virginia here Saturday night.

Glenn Thistlethwaite, athletic director, said the Worcester, Mass., sophomore had failed to meet certain "scholarship requirmeents" at the university.

Tymosko, a 210-pounder, is a former New England National Guard heavyweight champion and had been entered in the unlimited class in three meets for Richmond this season, but in each case the bouts were forfeited to him.

Special interest had been aroused in the Cavalier-Spider boxing meet by an announcement from Virginia that the Southern Conference champions would place an entry against Tymosko.

Tymosko was a mainstay at fullback on the strong Spider Football Team last season.

Augusta's Tank Team Beats R. M. A., 36-30

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Front Royal, Va., Feb. 11.—Augusta Military Academy tankmen won a closely contested swimming meet with Randolph-Macon Academy here this afternoon, 36 to 30.

Until the final relay event, Augusta had a lead of only 2 points, 28 to 26. Smith, of Randolph-Macon, was the star of the meet, winning first place in the 40-yard and 100-yard free style, 40-yard back stroke and 40-yard breast stroke events. Byrd and Beeson, of Augusta, won the 220-yard free style number and fancy diving, respectively.

Shamrock A. C. Wins.

Woodstock, Va., Feb. 11.—The Shamrock Athletic Club Basketball Team continued its winning streak here today, defeating the Camp Roosevelt five, 32-22.

Eastern Beats Central Five With Rally

Champs Triumph, 30-26; Roosevelt Bows to Tech, 35-25.

Interhigh Standings.

	W.	L.	Pct.
Eastern	7	0	1.000
Western	3	4	.428
Tech	3	4	.428
Roosevelt	3	4	.428
Central	1	5	.167

EASTERN HIGH'S unprecedented interhigh winning streak and Tech High's uphill climb for second place in the interhigh series continued unabated yesterday as both schools snatched hard-earned victories in the waning championship race.

The champions extended their unbroken string of interhigh victories to 22 games after a stubborn Central team had subjected the record to match strain and stress only to lose in the last half, 30 to 26. Tech went into a three-way tie for second place with Roosevelt and Western by upsetting the favored Rough Riders, 35 to 25.

The Maroon now looms a slight favorite to clinch second place in the series and with it probably the right to represent Washington in the forthcoming South Atlantic International championships at the University of Richmond. Tech must beat Central Friday, first Central must defeat Western Tuesday, to give the Techmen the invitation, however.

Misses Foul Shots.

The old spectacle of the last-place team in the series again giving Eastern its thoughest run of the season took place at Roosevelt's Gym, where the champions found themselves trailing 16-12 at half-time. Central lost the game from the foul line, missing 12 out of 16 free-shot chances.

Central got of to a fast start, taking a 12-5 lead in the first quarter as Billy Vermillion, the little quarterback, collaborated with Ralph Matera, newly out of junior high school, to make the champs look fairly crude.

Eastern recovered somewhat to come 4 points from tying the count before the half ended and continued the hot pact in the second half to lead, 23-22, going into the last quarter. The teams were waging the best game of the series, featured by some sparkling shots by Don Fones, of Central, and Dope Dean and Chick Colley, of Eastern.

Takes One-Point Lead.

A couple of lamost unbelievable shots by the light-haired Fones figured largely in keeping Central in the running and a brilliant side shot at ful speed by Colley gave Eastern the one-point lead going into the final stanza.

At this point, Dean came through with two baskets and Colley with a foul to stake Cenrtal to a 27-22 lead. A sleeper shot by Scheible after Matera had dumped a neat one-hander from a fast dribble, all but clinched the vistory which Central every now and then ironically made more possible by missing one foul shot after another.

In the Tech-Roosevelt fracas, the first period saw both teams fighting neck and neck, with Tech maintaining the squeamish edge of 6 to 5 because of its smoother teamwork. Lowe, Hahn and Merchant tallied for the Techman, while Kolius and Comer scored for the Rough Riders.

Big Spiro Kolius, high-scorer with 12 points, bore the brunt of the Tech attack for most of the second half and, incidentally, bore it very well, indeed. But unfortunately, it takes a team to beat a team.

With only George Coakley aiding the cause besides himself, Kolius battered and swung Roosevelt along on even terms throughout the third period. In his graceful-awkward style, he sank shots from almost impossible angles. But Vermillion, Merchant and Lowe enabled Tech to withstand the brilliant individual challenge and lead 21-to-17 with one session to go.

Lead Is Increased.

Bill Rea marked up two beauties in rapid succession to increase the Tech lead and Hahn and Merchant aided in nearly turning the game into a rout. But the fighting visitors weren't quite ready to yield. Kolius won the greatest ovation of the game by sinking one from midfloor.

In the last 30 seconds Vermillion scored after an under-the-basket skirmish and Kolius retaliated with what proved to be Roosevelt's dying effort. The final whistle was sounding when Hahn closed out the scoring for the home team.

Tonsils, Adenoids Are Gone

Heavyweight Champion Jimmy Braddock hurried home from Florida when he learned that his 2-year-old daughter, Rose Marie, was in a serious condition following an operation. When Braddock reached his home at Woodcliff, N. J., he found Rose Marie up and about, but not in such a good humor.

81 Football Prospects Await Gloomy Gil at Boston College

By the Associated Press.

NEWTON, Mass., Feb. 11.—If a shortage of experienced football material has been the cause of Gil Dobie's gloom, the former Cornell veteran will find Boston College a very happy place when he formally assumes the head coachship here two weeks hence.

A count of gridiron noses totaled 81 varsity holdovers and freshmen prospects, probably the most promising squad in Boston College history, available for Dobie's spring practice.

It has been years since Gloomy Gil has had so much material at his command and, since he has always started off with a bang every time he changed jobs, Boston College seems destined for the heights it scaled under the late Maj. Frank Cavanaugh.

Although 6 of the starting eleven against Holy Cross have played their last intercollegiate football, their places will be easy to fill, for only 9 of the 26 who saw action against the Crusaders will be missing next September, provided they escape scholastic difficulties.

Dobie, if he wished to act hastily, could line up three evenly matched teams in as many minutes. He might find it difficult to assemble a really good backfield out of his experienced material, but it is unlikely that he will ever be forced to do that, for Little Fella Gintoff, a quarterback, and Al Horsfall, one of the greatest kickers seen on this football sector in many years, need but little polishing to blossom out as sophomore super-stars.

It is almost a certainty that Capt. Alec Pszenny will share the varsity guard posts with the now ineligible Dimitri Ziatz, the crack shot-putter who startled the track world by beating Jack Torrance, Louisiana State's' world record holder, by 5¼ inches at the B. A. A. meet. Zaitz was a regular two seasons ago.

Colonial Cubs Five Meets G. W. High

Special Dispatch to The Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Feb. 11.—The varsity five of George Washington High and the Freshmen quint of G. W. University meet tomorrow night at 8:30 p. m. in what should be the best scholastic game of the season here. The Presidents have won ten games against two defeats and the first-year men of the Washington institution have overcome 12 foes and lost only one encounter.

The Garfield A. C., one of the best girls' team in the District, meets the G. W. High lassies in the preliminary at 7:30 p. m.

Episcopal High went through a punishing two-hour drill at the Hill this afternoon in preparation for their game tomorrow with St. Alban's School on the latters court.

Washington's Bureau of Investigation sensational basketball team and the Columbia Firemen, a local quint, clash here at the Armory Hall tomorrow night at 8:30 in the feature attraction of the season for independent cage fans.

The G-Men boast seven former college captains. Some of the outstanding men are Jim Thompson, former Duke star; Walter Morris, Georgetown; Joe Lynch, Mount St. Marys, and Bernie Jones, of independent fame.

Three Junior League games will be served up for the early arrivals beginning at 5 p. m.

Colonial Frosh Five Faces Rinaldi Friday

The forerunner to what may prove the high light of the coming District A. A. U. basket ball championship, sponsored by The Post, will be staged Friday night in George Washington University's gym when the Colonial freshmen, winners of 13 out of 14 starts, engage Rinaldi Tailors, only team holding a victory over them. Action will start at 8 o'clock.

Rinaldi, with Bill Noonan, former G. W. varsity center, in its line-up, has won 41 out of 43 games, including a 26-to-20 decision over the freshmen at Tech High last month. A capacity crowd is expected. Admission will be 35 cents.

Augusta Five Is Winner Over Fishburne, 32-25

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Staunton, Va., Feb. 10.—Augusta Military Academy won its third prep basketball game in four starts this afernoon when it defeated Fishburne, 32 to 25. Capt. Gus Heilman led the scorers with 14 points, while Cox made 10 for the loosers.

Purses Increased.

Warrenton, Va., Feb. 11.—Purses in two of the races of the Virginia Gold Cup program, which will be run at Broadview, near Warrenton, on Saturday, May 20, have been increased, according to George W. Cutting, secretary and treasurer.

Spills and Thrills Mark Bobsledding

mans picked themselves up, uninjured and started to march down the run in single file, chewing their fingernails and muttering curses, until chased off the course.

The Italian sled was involved in the most terrible smash of the day. The crew was hurled 20 feet through the air. Your correspondent was standing with Donna Fox as the Italians came down the course at terrific speed. Fox was pale and nervous, forseeing disaster at Bavaria curve. He grabbed my arm and said:

"They never will get through Bavaria curve at that speed."

The next moment they entered the curve with their bob out of control. They rode high on the wall and shot for the outside. Francesco Dr. Zanna, the steerman, gave the wheel a yank and shot down at right angles, to pile into the opposite wall. The sled and four blue-lad figures were hurled 20 yards into the air, spinning like they have been blown by an explosion, headed for a tree. There was a great gasp from the crowd. Two landed under the bob and two on their heads. All were removed by stretcher sleds, one badly injured.

Tops With Spectators.

This is the most useless and foolhardy of all sports, but it is tops with the spectators, who are thrilled by the accidents.

The slow time caused by an accident in the first run caused the Americans to trail in third place. At the end of the first day's trials, the Swiss were first and the Germans second. The final two runs are scheduled for tomorrow morning, at the crack of dawn.

The Americans had another narrow escape in the second run by the Tyler team when a skid at Bavaria curve tossed Jimmy Bickford, the brake man—a big, good-natured ake Placid kid, into the air off the sled. He just clung with his fingers, like a late commuter catching the 8:17.

Jimmy was on the brink of disaster for 30 yards, since a fall takes a man off the team and out of the race. Then the No. 3 man, Lawrence, reached back and pulled Bickford back on hte sled, to continue in god time.

Women Skaters Active.

In the only other activity today, the women figure skaters went through part of their school, or compulsory, figures. They conclude tomorrow.

By sweeping the first two places of the 500-meter skating event, Norway tightened its grip on the runner-up position in unofficial team standings. Germany leads with 37 points while Norway has 27. Finland, with 10 points scored in yesterday's 40-kilometer ski relay race, is third. The United States is fourth, 2½ points in front of Sweden and France, which are tied at 4-all.

Dog's Life

Canines at Show Put on High Hat! Don't Give a Wag.

By Jack Miley.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—We went over to the Westminster Kennel Club's canine carnival at Madison Squire Garden last night and came away all torn by conflicting emotions. This mastiff Mardi Gras was good—very good—and we do not wish to disparage its quantity nor quality.

There were nearly 3,000 beef-boilers, worth perhaps a total of $1,000,000 on the paw, benched at this barkfest. Each entrant was a champion or the descendant of a champion, and practically all of these blue-blooded beagles could trace their ancestry directly back to the dog deck of the Mayflower—on its first voyage.

As a pooch parade, this airedale opera left nothing to be desired, and that is just what we are complaining about. Perfection in any form always awes and depresses us—and that kiyoodle convention, we soon considered, was no place for a fellow with an inferiority complex.

IF we'd encountered just one friendly, tail-wagging mongrel in the place, we might have brightened up and felt more at home. But the show dogs weren't that way. They gave us the dead pan and the chilled clavicle.

These four-footed aristocrats were so absolutely flawless by birth, breeding and preference that they seemed to look down their noses to snoot and snub us, as if to say: "You're really high-class company, perhaps for the first time in your life; so try and conduct yourself accordingly, you poor, misguided peasant—or we shall ask you to call a policeman and have yourself put out!"

Milin-coated-women and top hatted men peered into the narrow cages of these proud beasts clucking their tongues and snapping their fingers in hope of some sign of recognition from the regal occupants of the hutches.

BUT they were doomed to disappointment, for invariably the dogs spurned the overtures of their admirers by gazing at them in a bored, detached way that indicated their attitude toward this adulation was: "You've got the money, but we've got the breeding!"

A show dog's existence is not a happy one. It was probably in one of these contests that the phrose, "A dog's life" was coined. The pups are primped and petted and pedigreed from dawn to dusk. They're powdered and painted without end. The jealous, embittered exhibitors wrangle among themselves and hint darkly that their lusky rivals are "doing business" with the judges. There is little sportsmanship in the dog game; it is a cold, commercial racket, with few exceptions.

The most amazing luxuries are offered by lobby gadget dealers for your pets. We saw dog goggles, morris chairs, hand-painted Chinese chippendale beds, shower baths, silent whistles (that only your dog can hear) and ultra-ray health lamps. The latter was a neat little number, priced at mere $79.50, and can be used by any member of the family, as well as your bone-cruncher.

BUT you can have all those pedigreed whoozises—and we'll take Nellie of Flemington. Remember Nell?—The scrawny non-descript the reporters at the Hauptmann trial adopted as their mascot and stuffed to the bursting point with the first real food she'd ever met. She was the town trollop; but, like my gal Sal, dead on the level an a regular sort of gal. Nell is living on Park avenue now with Travis Fulton, the round scribe who brought her home with him.

Talking Is Called Key to a Team's Success

TAKE it from Elmer Ripley, a gent who has forgotten more basketball than all of our local college players ever will know, a team has to be talkative in action to be successful. A player must be able to waggle his tongue and dribble, too. You've got to be a basketball Winchell to be good.

Mr. Ripley was just preparing to get the jump on one of Bert Olmsted's famous steaks when he gave us the secret of the Original New York Celtic's success. We were teething on a steak, too, as the pleasant-faced, quiet chap who has been successively and successfully a pro star, Georgetown coach, Yale coach and pro star, unburdened himself.

"The trouble with these fellows today," he began, "is that they don't talk to one another when they're playing. A team that is fast and knows when and how to switch players—that is, while on the defensive, of course—can stop any play at any time.

"Now these youngsters know the value of switching men and they know how to switch, but they don't know when to simply because they don't talk to one another. Why the old Celtics were always talking, and if I figured it was more important for me to take another man I happened to be near, I simply yelled to my teammate, "I have this man, get Joe Doakes," or whatever his name happened to be. Or I'd call out his number.

"Later on we'd switch to other men. But the point is that we never had two men guarding one, like you often see in college games, because we talked to one another and always knew what the other fellows were doing."

Ripley, who is doing missionary basketball work, touring the East with a film demonstrating the fundamentals of the game, thinks the college game could be speeded up by incorporating or substituting three pro rules for those now in use.

Firstly, he points out, under pro rules members of both teams, other than the centers, must remain behind a line 15-feet on either side of the center circle, until the centers have jumped and tapped the ball putting it in play. That gives everybody, including the referee, who often is injured by onrushing players anxious to get the ball, a fair shake. It helps the use of plays, which are seldom used in college basketball because of the jam around center.

Secondly, he believes the 10-second rule, which requires the offensive team to bring the ball over on the defensive team's side of the court within 10 seconds, would be more effective if not put in force until the last five minutes of play. The professionals use the same rule, but in the modified form.

Thirdly, he would junk the three-second rule, which prohibits players from remaining in the free throw lane beyond that space of time, when on the offensive. He would let them loiter there as long as they pleased, provided that when they would get rid of it within one second.

As Ripley adroitly reveals, the 10-second rule cuts the available playing space exactly in half, and the three-second by-law takes another huge chunk out of the remainder. Just a few more seconds and you'll have to be a tight-rope walker to play the game.

Lynx Eye Wins Hialeah Nose Thriller

Watson Set Down After Triumph

Quel Jeu Runs Second; Close Finishes Mark Three Events.

By the Associated Press.

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., Feb. 11. Thrilling finishes marked the races here this afternoon. The third tight fit in a row came with the running of the featured Tavares Purse, fourth on the card. Backers of Robert Robertson's Lynx Eye, the $5 for $2 favorite in a field of five sprinters, had to go through an attack of the jitters before the judges, aided by the use of the "camera eye," decided in favor of the Wildair gelding. Quel Jeu, from the Arden Farms, was an easy second.

The Shady Brook Farm's Visigoth was third, four lengths back under a poor ride by Don Meade. Top Dog was fourth and Bright Haven, practically left at the post, a distanced last. Lynx Eye covered the 6½ furlongs of heavy going in 1:19 2-5.

Top Dog opened up daylight over Quel Jeu and Visigoth in the first furlong. Quel Jeu headed the Denemark Gelding around the bend while Lynx Eye assumed third place in front of Visigoth. Bobby Watson shot the choice around his rivals turning for home but Quel Jeu stubbornly refused to falter.

The two heads bobbed down to the wire with Lynx Eye's nose dropping in front at the line.

Bobby Watson drew a 10-day suspension from the stewards for rough riding astride Lynx Eye, winner of the fourth and feature event.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LYNX EYE, $5.00, $3.50, $2.80; QUEL JEU, $4.80, $3.60; VISIGOTH, $3.40.

LYNX EYE, closer up with the pace than usual in the early running, was forced to stay on the outside when engaging the leaders, assumed a slight lead in the final sixteenth mile and vigorously punished approaching the finish, barely lasted to stall off QUEL JEU, the latter followed TOP DOG closely in the stretch run. VISIGOTH had a slight lead midway of the homestretch and fought it out stubbornly until the close.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—WACOCHE, $7.80, $3.60, $2.50; HOGANS FOX, $3.30, $2.30; COL. GREENE, $2.60.

WACOCHE, favoring the underfooting, went into an easy lead, saved ground wherever possible, shook off R. PINCHOT and drew out at will during the stretch run. HOGANS FOX, rated back of the leaders for six furlongs, rallied nicely when shaken up, but was no match for the winner. COL. GREENE, permitted to go along on his own courage while going wide, finished with good energy during the last quarter mile.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles; claiming. Purse, $800. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:08. Off at 5:11½. Winner, Sidney Stoneh's ch. c. DOUBLE FINESSE, obtaining racing room along the inside until leaving the backstretch, displaced STUMPTOWN after five furlongs and continued strongly until the close. AURA, raced forwardly from the beginning, rallied strongly when reaching the homestretch and closed gamely. STUMPTOWN was kept under strong urging after being displaced from the lead, and continued willingly until the finish.

with Bill Bennings.

Dear Al:

I received a note today signed "Six-Furlong Sal." In part, she wrote: "I believe you are getting modest, Bill. You don't list your winners any more or is it because you don't have any winners any more? You have not mentioned Clocker Mike's appetite for a dozen columns. Isn't Mike eating any more? Also you have not called yourself Mrs. Bennings' lovely boy for sometime, or is it because you are not lovely any more?" I quit listing my winners each day because it was too easy for the boss to determine that I was having a losing streak. This isn't a bad day to list them, however. We had Portden (best bet), $14.80; Sophia Tucker, $5.20, and Supreme Court, $14.30. Clocker Mike's appetite grows like the first chain letters. Last, but not least, Mrs. Bennings thinks I'm as lovely as ever. Perhaps I have been taking myself too seriously of late in trying to fill this space with horse news instead of horse play. I shall try to mix them hereafter. Here's the stuff—and it's mellow. BILL.

First race—Miss Subway is gifted with a lot of speed and seems suited at this sprint route. She gets in with light weight and if capably ridden will garner a set of brackets. Jackspine seems the most dangerous of the others. Corum for the show end.

Second race—Hi Lad should make an excellent showing in this field if he fails to take the chief end of the purse. I'm not particularly crazy about that inside post position, but he has a lot of speed and may overcome it. Tap On is said to be a shifty youngster. Buttermilk has worked well and is strongly recommended by Clocker Mike.

Third race—Tragedian has not had any the best of the racing luck here. With the promise that Meade will ride I'm going to hope for clear sailing and a win mutuel. Flag of War and Buzzing Around for the place and show.

Fourth race—Albuquerque is in excellent shape now and gets in light, thanks to the apprentice allowance. Young Fallon knows how to ride this horse and I see no reason for mistakes. Slave and Canimar are two platers which pack a keen closing punch. They will be ready if the top one falters.

Fifth race—The test appears to be between Bay Bubble and the Bradley Entry of Bar Nothing and Bold Flirt. I prefer Bay Bubble despite the assignment of 115 pounds. If there is a major upset I look for Naughty to be the medium. Clocker Mike likes him.

Sixth race—Fidelis is sharp as the proverbial tack now and will be a keen figure if not the winner of this heat. He will carry the Benning backing. Chasar ran a bang-up race on the turf last week and should go well on the main track. Late Date has been closing well and is due to awake soon if not today.

Seventh race—Jayvee takes 114 pounds into action in this field but is far too fit to be placed other than on top. I believe he will have Don Guzman to beat. Providing Don Meade can make Round Table break, the one-time Labrot horse may be prominent.

Eighth race—Mixed Party toyed with a somewhat similar field on the turf course. I'm going to string along tomorrow. Drusus and Smear for the other awards.

Best bet—Miss Subway.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PORTDEN, $14.80, $7.10, $4.20; LIEUT. GREENOCK, $11.40, $6.90; NIGHT SERGE, $3.10.

PORTDEN, racing as if suited by the footing and having more speed than usual, took command shortly after the start, stalled off stiff contention from NIGHT SERGE, met a strong effort from LIEUT. GREENOCK, and outstayed the latter under a hard drive. LIEUT. GREENOCK, prominent during the early racing, rallied strongly midway of the homestretch, but hung approaching the finish. NIGHT SERGE was rushed hard to assume a forward position, offered stout contention for five furlongs, then weakened.

SECOND RACE—Three furlongs. Purse, $800. For 2-year-old fillies, maiden. Start good (gate, chute). Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:53. Off at 2:57. Winner, Orienta Stable's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SOPHIA TUCKER, $5.20, $3.70, $2.50; PERLETTE, $4.40, $2.90; MY ELSIE, $3.20.

SOPHIA TUCKER, away nicely and going strongly to gain command during the opening furlong, rallied vigorously approaching the finish and barely lasted to stall off PERLETTE. Latter, a stout factor while racing on the outside, responded willingly to punishment and was wearing the winner down at every stride nearing the close.

THIRD RACE—Six and one-half furlongs; allowances. Atlantic Coast Line purse, $1,100. For 3-year-old colts and geldings. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:26. Off at 3:29. Winner, Weston W. Adams ch. c. (3), by Galetian—Gay Nineties. Trained by Lyman A. Brusie. Value to winner, $775, second, $175; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:20 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GALLANT GAY, $11.70, $5.90, $3.90; PARALDA, $39.20, $15.90; STUBBS, $3.10.

GALLANT GAY, outrun in the first half, moved up gamely when placed to a hard drive, and outgaining entries in the homestretch, then closing full of run, was up right at the end. PARALDA, raced forwardly from the beginning, came through between horses when straightened into the homestreach and finished with good speed.

FOURTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs; allowances. Tavares purse, $1,200. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start bad. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:02. Off at 4:07. WACOCHE, favoring the underfooting, went into an easy lead, saved ground wherever possible, shook off R. PINCHOT and drew out at will during the stretch run. HOGANS FOX, rated back of the leaders for six furlongs, rallied nicely when shaken up, but was no match for the winner. COL. GREENE, permitted to go along on his own courage while going wide, finished with good energy during the last quarter mile.

STUMPTOWN was kept under strong urging after being displaced from the lead, and continued willingly until the finish.

Five-Day Week Gains Headway In Industry

Includes 57 Per Cent of 4½ Million Workers Covered by Survey.

New York, Feb. 11.—The five-day week has become widely prevalent in America business establishments. It applies somewhat more frequently to factory workers than to clerical employes. This information is brought out in a nation-wide investigation of industrial relations policies made by the National Industrial Conference Board. The survey covered 2,452 business establishments in manufacturing, mining, transportation and communication, wholesale and retail trade, finance and public utilities. Employment represented by these companies amounts to more than $4,500,000.

Wage earners in 1,404 companies, with 2,767,000 employes, are on the five-day week. These companies constitute 57 per cent of the total number covered in the survey. A five-day week for clerical employes is reported by 1,110 companies, or 45 per cent of the total.

The conference board's survey indicates that the five-day week has been accepted more generally by large than by small concerns except in the case of the very large companies with 10,000 and more employes. Of the companies employing fewer than 100 persons, 48 per cent have a five-day week for wage earners. The percentage increases as size of establishment increases, and the largest proportion, 71 per cent, is found in companies with 5,000 to 9,999 employes. The proportion, however, drops to 49 per cent with respect to companies employing more than 100,000 persons.

The same general situation is found in the case of the five-day week for clerical employes. From 32 per cent of companies with fewer than 100 employes, the proportion increases as size of establishment increases, reaching 60 per cent for companies with 5,000 to 9,999 employes, and declines to 52 per cent for companies employing over 10,000.

On a geographical basis the largest proportion of reporting companies with a five-day week for both wage earners and clerical workers is in New England, followed in order by the Middle Atlantic States and the East North Central States. The five-day week is less prevalent in the South and West.

New unit sales since the 1936 models were introduced amounted to 247,686, and used car sales, in connection with the company's used car disposal program, were 186,966 units, the announcement stated.

Rush to Buy Stocks Sends Prices to New High Levels; Government Bonds Strong.

New York, Feb. 11.—The speculative appetite for stocks was whetted by reminders from high quarters that credit inflation is a lively possibility and on a turnover of around 3,350,000 shares—the largest since January 15—prices were pushed up into new high grounds. Leaders rose 2 and 3 points and held their gains well to the close of trading. Government bonds and dollars were strong, but that was not altogether inconsistent with the action of stocks. May wheat closed ⅝ of a cent higher at 97⅞ cents a bushel.

In the foreign exchanges and in the Government bond market, at least, inflationary fears for this country were shoved somewhat into the background. Sterling fell sharply, and the gold currencies dropped. Reports that work on a French loan in London had been suspended for the time being seemed to give the signal for bearishness on francs. The quotation for francs and guilders receded far enough to settle the question for the next few days at least of further shipments of gold to Europe.

In a backhanded way, that development was used as a reason for bullish activity in stocks, for the classical action of the stock market is to decline when gold leaves and to rise when it comes in, or when a threat at its exportation is removed, on the theory that the more gold the more credit expansion will take place soon or late. Possibly another reason for stock activity was the prediction of inflation of credit and higher prices given by former President Hoover.

Rush for Stocks.

Steel shares—and especially United States Steel common, which opened 1⅝ points higher—took up at the start where they left off in yesterday's market. They gave the trading a touch of old-time bullishness and set off so much new buying and short covering that the ticker was sent into another mess of delayed reporting in the first two hours. When poise was regained, during the noon hour, some profits were taken in the early risers and speculative attention turned to fresh fields of endeavor. Public utility shares next were chosen for a rapid group movement. Many of them were bid up to new high prices.

Rails, motors and metals joined the steels in the early dealings. Steel common's gain of the past two days was stretched to more than 5 points. Great Northern was the feature of the railroad list with a rise of more than 3 points. Some of the low priced issues were strong, notably Kansas City Southern, said to be the receiver of many Dutch orders. Pittsburgh & West Virginia and the various classes of Colorado & Northern scored gains of 1 to 5 points.

Chrysler sold at the highest price since 1929. General motors, ex-dividend, climbed a point. Nash was active. New high prices were paid for Kennecott and Anaconda. Silvers perked up 1 to 2 points. Airplanes also hardened. Oils were not much better than firm. Mixed price movements were the rule in the foods, tobaccos, rubbers, merchants and amusements. Great buoyancy was shown by Telephone, Western Union and General Electric. Consolidated Gas, Water Works and Columbia Gas led the utilities.

Bonds or Stocks.

Herbert Hoover's testimony on the point of common stocks as investments preferable to bonds is another reminder that security markets have moved over into a new cycle. From 1928 to 1929 questions began to be raised as to whether it were not better to shift trust funds and investment capital from bonds, already at low yields, into common stocks. Books were written covering long periods to show that in long run the common stock investor did better than the bond investors. Naturally the theme was popular in the brokerage offices.

The crash of 1929 and the long decline in common stocks put a damper on the enthusiasm of the public for speculation, but the case still is not proved that the common stock in the long run was the loser. Bonds also fell, although the high grade varieties did pretty well. For short periods much depends on when the shifts were made. Numerous sound common stocks still can be obtained at rather low prices and prices which their prospective earning power promises good yields, while money rates scarcely can go lower as an aid to bond yields.

Whether Mr. Hoover's trust be allowed to take on more common stocks, many other trust funds and foundations have done so. The safer and slowly moving bond naturally is the choice for ordinary times, but a real dose of inflation will bring hard times to those who depend solely upon bond investment. Not only will the resultant fall in bond prices hurt borrowing power and pocketbooks if any bonds must be sold, but the fixed income will look sickly against rising cost of living. The investor ought to be alive to the possibilities as an immediate concern, and in addition to taking the proper precautions against what seems to be in prospect he might turn a bit more vocal and politically influential in seeking to prevent disaster from inflation.

Great Northern.

Great Northern stood out in a mediocre railroad share market. Northern seemed to follow the rise in Steel instead of the trend of the rails. The market thought that Steel's buoyancy was a prophecy of a considerably greater ore movement, which will help Great Northern. Some predict an increase of 1,000,000 tons in ore traffic for the road this year. As an operating unit the Great Northern is said to be in the best condition in many years and quickly can take advantage of any expansion in traffic. The heavy snows of the Northwest are lifting crop prospects. Another bull point on Great Northern is the reduction in fixed charges. Within two years it is hoped that total fixed charges will have been brought down from $18,000,000 to $12,000,000. Incidentally, the last bond refunding issue is going to the insurance companies and other large buyers. As underwriter the RFC probably won't get a single bond.

Research Held Key to Restore Rail Supremacy

Roads Suffer by Neglect of Laboratory, Says du Pont Expert.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Wilmington, Del., Feb. 11.—Dr. C. M. A. Stine, du Pont company vice president and an authority on industrial research, told 500 traffic experts here tonight that not one of eight major inventions vital to railroad progress had been originated by a railroad man. He diagnosed present railroad ills as being due largely to neglect of scientific research, and prescribed research as the remedy to restore rail supremacy in the future.

"The most casual survey of land transportation as it developed during the nineteenth century reveals facts that well may have caused the railroad executive of the early 1900's to obey his own warning to stop, look and listen," Dr. Stine told members of the Wilmington Traffic Club and guests representative of national transportation interests.

"Eight great inventions stand out as milestones of railroad progress, yet not one of these was originated by a railroad man. The telegraph was invented by Wheatstone, an English professor of philosophy, and Morse, an American artist. Pullman, inventor of the sleeping car, was a street contractor in Chicago when he conceived the idea that was to revolutionize rail travel by night.

Janney a Clerk.

"Eli H. Janney, who patented the first automatic car coupler, was a clerk in a drygoods store. The automatic block signal system was originated by Thomas Seavy Hall, a retired textile manufacturer. The famous Westinghouse was a youngster of 23 when he invented the air brake, and his only previous experience had been as a worker in his father's carpenter and machine shop. A physician and sanitarium proprietor, Hosea W. Libbey invented the vestibule buffer that made it possible to eliminate open platforms on passenger trains. The refrigerator car was largely a development of the packing industry, and the first electric locomotive was designed by Moses G. Farmer, a school teacher."

Dr. Stine said "It is doubtful if the research laboratories of all American railroads combined are comparable to the laboratories of General Motors, which constitute but one research organization of many in the highway field."

"When the first of the already famous streamlined trains went into service on the Burlington in 1934," he said, "it was powered by a Diesel-electric engine built by Winton, a subsidiary of General Motors. Its streamlining was a development of aviation. The roller-bearings on which spun its wheels had been made by Timkin, a noted automotive supplier. And the train itself had been built by Edward G. Budd, an automobile body and wheel manufacturer, out of stainless steel developed by metallurgical chemists and given its first wide use in America by Henry Ford."

General Motors Gets Big Diesel Contract

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—Electro-Motive Corporation, subsidiary of General Motors Corporation, has been awarded a contract for Diesel-electric locomotives for the four new streamlined trains of the Burlington Railroad.

The contract involves approximately $1,000,000.

Int. Tel. Plans Refunding of $35,000,000

New Convertible Issue at 3½% Is Under Consideration.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 11.—It was learned in Wall street today that a New York banking group is discussing plans for an International Telephone & Telegraph refunding operation estimated at from $22,-000,000 to $35,000,000.

The proceeds, it was stated, would be used to retire about $22,-000,000 of loans held by New York banks and the balance of any financing exceeding this sum would be used to redeem part of the company's $37,500,000 4½ per cent debentures which mature January 1, 1939.

The trend of current discussions, it is understood, indicates the possibility of a new convertible issue bearing a 3½ per cent coupon with a conversion privilege for capital stock at a price between $20 and $25 a share.

In the past J. P. Morgan & Co. have had a prominent part in International Telephone financing. Indications are that Morgan Stanley & Co., will head any group offering a refunding issue, it was stated. The bank loans were contracted about five years ago mainly on behalf of affiliates.

By Morgan Baker.

COLLEGE graduation is not required for initial appointments to all higher positions in the Canadian public service, as was indicated in first reports of the recent ruling of the Canadian Civil Service Commission.

BAKER.

This more explicit information is contained in a letter to E. Claude Babcock, president, American Federation of Government Employes, from Charles H. Bland, chairman of the Canadian Civil Service Commission.

Some weeks ago Babcock protested against what he considered undue weight given college training in certain examinations of the United States Civil Service Commission. More recently word from Canada indicated that plans tending to favor college graduates appeared to be in formation there. Bland states:

"The misapprehension which has apparently arisen is probably due to the fact that our Commission has recently held an examination to fill a limited number of Grade 4 clerkships in the public service, which could not be satisfactorily filled by promotion, and for which university training is desirable. The examination for these particular postions was limited to university graduates, but there is no intention of making such a restriction apply to all Grade 4 clerkships, or to the higher positions in the service in general.

"As a matter of fact, under the Canadian civil service law, vacancies must, whenever it is possible and consistent with the best interests of the service, be filled by promotion from the lower ranks, and this is the procedure followed in the great majority of cases."

The American Federation of Government Employes has opposed plans to restrict age limits of applicants for Civil Service examinations to such a degree that private employers would be encouraged to deny employment to persons in or approaching middle age, and it has opposed restricting examinations to college graduates, except where specialized professional training is essential, on the ground that such procedure tends to build up a caste system in the Government service.

The interest of the federation in the Canadian procedure was to prevent the establishment of a precedent there which might be adopted in this country. Bland's assurance that the practice of restricting examinations will not be made general in Canada is described by Babcock as "most welcome."

Government Printing Office, American Legion Band, Post No. 33, will hold its first music festival Friday night, in Harding Hall, with several soloists listed on the program, it is announced by Walter J. Heber, (P), committee chairman.

2,000 to Get Jobs.

More than 2,000 persons will be employed to handle the veterans' bonus payments in bonds and checks, it was announced yesterday by Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, administrator of veterans' affairs. Approximately 900 will be employed for the central office here.

In answer to hundreds of inquiries, all appointments are being made from Civil Service registers, authorities emphasize. Already 594 are reported to have received appointments.

The Department of Agriculture Orchestra will celebrate Lincoln Day by presenting a concert in the Agriculture auditorium, at 8:30 tonight. The program will include selections by Massenet, Grieg, Rossini and a complete Mendelssohn symphony.

The plutocrats are squawking
About the rubber dollar;
They say it's worth but 60 cents,
And put up quite a holler.

But to the Gov-ment worker,
With his debits in arrears,
His dollar's made of celluloid;
It flames up and disappears.

This ditty would a moral tell,
And consolation show,
Hadn't you rather yours burn up here
Than in hades down below?

500 Needed on Project.

Holger Cahill, director of the art division of the WPA, has announced plans to employ 500 persons in the compilation of a source-book of American design, as part of a $3,000,000 project to provide jobs for needy artists. Early American products, such as Maryland iron-work and Carolina slave-made pottery, will be included in the work, which is to be called an "Index of American Design."

Cahill stated that the index, on which 200 persons are already engaged, "is the first effort to assemble a comprehensive graphic record of native art, which will make available in one collection the authentic and American source material in the fields of furniture, costume, textiles, floor coverings, glassware, silver, metalwork, ceramics, wood and stone carvings, household utensils and other objects which, because of excellent design of workmanship, have enriched American life in the past."

Officer Who Shot Lion To Get Official Praise

Baltimore, Feb. 11 (AP).—Patrolman Alexander Jzierski, who shot a lioness which broke loose in a crowded theater here Sunday, will be commended by the police department, Capt. John R. Schueler, the patrolman's immediate superior, said. "Patrolman Jezierski deserves all the credit in the world. Gun or no gun, anybody face to face with a lion that size, and who doesn't run, deserves plenty of credit."

Ruthie, the lioness, was about up to par again today in an animal hospital here. She probably will rejoin the wild animal act of which she is a part tomorrow.

Edward Polzuszny, 15, who suffered a slight claw wound on the knee during the lioness' bounding about the theater, is recovering at his home.

French Deputy Calls on Soviet To Pay Debts

Demands Loans Be Satisfied Before Ratification of War Treaty.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Feb. 11.—A demand that Soviet Russia pay its pre-war debts to France was made today when the chamber of deputies opened a long-awaited debate on ratification of the Franco-Soviet mutual assistance treaty.

Citing the Soviet's failure "to pay its debts," Charles de Lasteyrie, former minister of finance, urged a delay in ratification until arrangements had been made to settle czarist loans he estimated at 200,000,000,000 francs (about $13,800,000,00).

France's intention of consulting signers of the Locarno treaty before going to war against Germany or to the aid of Russia in the event of an attack against her was pledged to the chamber.

An official report by Deputy Henry Torres assured the deputies that France would ask Great Britain, Italy and Belgium if they considered the German attack "unprovoked" before aiding Russia.

This was designed to answer Germany's protest that the pact violates the Locarno Treaty.

Torres flatly admitted that the treaty was intended to deal only with the hypothesis of "unprovoked aggression by Germany," asking, "if Germany has no thought of aggression, why does she refuse to sign a defensive agreement?"

In reply to arguments citing the Russian debt, Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin replied that the treaty was political only and said the French government "reserved creditors' rights."

Approval of the treaty is accepted as a foregone conclusion and Soviet and French military leaders are already discussing application of its terms.

The treaty was signed last May in Paris by Pierre Laval, then premier, and Vladimir Potemkin, the Soviet ambassador.

It provides immediate military assistance if either France or Russia is the object of "unprovoked aggression" by a European power, but in case Japan and Russia went to war France would not be pledged to aid the Soviets.

Japanese Accused.

Moscow, Feb. 11 (AP).—The government newspaper Izvestia accused the Japanese tonight of provoking a war scare in the Far East to block ratification by the French Chamber of Deputies of the Franco-Soviet mutual assistance pact.

Discussion of the treaty began in the chamber in Paris today.

A few hours earlier a Soviet dispatch from Urga, Outer Mongolia, asserted Japanese and Manchukuoan troops were concentrating along the Outer Mongolian border preparatory to "new and more serious provocations."

Repeated incidents and skirmishes have occurred along that frontier in recent months.

"Certain governments of Europe are exceedingly displeased that the mutual assistance pact is up for ratification," Izvestia said. This reference was believed to be to Germany and Poland.

"Japanese authorities, either on special request or their own initiative, render a peculiarly friendly service to governments striving to disrupt the Franco-Soviet agreement."

The intention, the newspaper declares, is to impress French deputies with the danger of war in the Far East into which the treaty would draw France.

Tax Appeals Board May Close Hearing in Mellon Case Today

U. S. Completes Charges Against Former Secretary of Treasury After Losing Battle to Cite Bank's Deals With Other Individuals.

By the Associated Press.

Balked in its attempt to present what it called "corroborative" evidence, the Government yesterday completed its case against Andrew W. Mellon before the Board of Tax Appeals.

Early conclusion, possibly today, of the frequently interrupted hearings begun a year ago was indicated when Frank J. Hogan, Mellon's lawyer, said he had only a "few little details" in rebuttal.

Briefs then will be filed, but using former cases as a criterion, it may be months before a decision is announced. The Government is seeking to collect $3,075,103 in taxes on Mellon's 1931 income. The former Secretary of the Treasury, who has charged "political persecution," asks a $139,045 refund on the $847,559 he paid for that year.

Yesterday's proceedings were something in the nature of an anti-climax. The hearing before the board was interrupted last summer when the Union Trust Co. of Pittsburgh declined to produce subpenaed records.

The Government obtained an order from Pittsburgh Federal courts compelling the bank to produce records pertaining not only to transactions with Mellon, but with other individuals. Their eligibility as evidence was left for determination by the Tax Appeals Board.

Hogan sat quietly while Mellon records were introduced, but quickly objected when documents pertaining to transactions of the bank with Roy A. Hunt, president of the Aluminum Co. of America, and others were offered. He contended such evidence was irrelevant.

He was sustained by the board.

The Mellon attorney was elated, telling reporters with a chuckle, "they (Government lawyers) were one year getting the papers in here. It took one hour to get them out."

Hogan said that had the documents been admitted, the hearing would have been prolonged for months. Robert H. Jackson, chief Government counsel, who flared up and threatened to quit the case at Pittsburgh when the board rejected a Government brief, seemed unperturbed.

Jackson said the rejected documents were not "essential," but corroborative, explaining he had desired to show that others were following the same practice as those attributed to Mellon.

The white-haired Pittsburgh financier, who became ambassador to England after serving in the Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover Cabinets, sat through yesterday's session without outward emotion. Dressed in a brown suit, he leaned forward at times to catch every word that was said.

The Government sought to prove that Mellon had engaged in a series of "wash sales" with the Pittsburgh bank, which he dominates; selling stock to the bank, and rebuying after 30 days for the purpose of establishing losses for income tax purposes.

It cited a sale of 123,622 shares of Pittsburgh Coal Co. stock to the Union Trust Co., and resale to Coalesoed (a holding) company, owned by Mellon and the immediate members of his family.

Another instance was the alleged purchase by the bank of 54,000 shares of common stock of the Western Public Service Corporation from Mellon and his brother, R. B. Mellon, now deceased, in December, 1931, and its resale to them the following year.

"It overtaxes credulity," Jackson said. "The Mellon stock was never bought at all. Records were passed, but not ownership."

He added that constant repetitions of such transactions overruled the appearance of "good face," remarking that should a seller, by accident, dispose of a worthwhile security he might experience difficulty in buying it back. Such difficulty, he observed, was not evident.

Documents asked in the first five sections of the subpena, pertaining solely to Mellon, were introduced without argument. The board intervened, however, when Jackson sought to introduce transactions of Hunt, W. B. Schiller, W. L. Mellon, John H. Nicholson, and James A. Hommer.

Catholics, Reds Taken in Series Of Nazi Raids

Priests and Laymen Seized as Hitler Wires Pope Best Wishes.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Feb. 11.—Catholics and Communists were arrested on various charges yesterday in simultaneous action by secret police in several sections of Germany, it was revealed today. Unverified reports said the arrests totaled at least 100. While police were swooping down on priests and laymen, Reichsfuehrer Hitler telegraphed his best wishes to Pope Pius on the anniversary of his coronation.

The Rhineland was the center of the roundup where Catholics had been charged of conspiring with Communists against the government.

Other charges alleged illegal uses of the Catholic flag by the Catholic youth organization connected with the Cologne Cathedral.

Extreme secrecy prevailed as Catholics at Cologne and Dusseldorf are afraid to discuss the situation.

Eight persons associated with the Sisters of St. Canisius have drawn severe sentences and heavy fines for violation of Nazi laws.

Mother Superior Maria Breitner was sentenced to 42 months in the penitentiary and five other sisters drew shorter sentences. Two male associates were sentenced to 18 and 21 months, respectively, in addition to heavy fines being imposed.

They were charged with illegal secret transference of funds from the Constance and Mayence branches of the order to the chief office in Freiburg, Switzerland, a violation of the Nazi law prohibiting shipment of money from the country.

The Canisius Order devotes itself chiefly to the furthering of Catholic education.

A Catholic priest at Dresden named Kenter was sentenced to two years "for passing on inflammatory Marxist literature" falling under the term "atrocity propaganda."

(Recent raids on Catholic meetings have aroused apprehension that a movement of undetermined magnitude was beginning. During the week-end, a session of Catholic youth leaders was broken up at Cologne and Ludwig Wolker, national president of the organization, and a dozen others were taken by automobile to Dusseldorf.

Margiotti Denies 'Tax Grab' Charge

Washington, Pa., Feb. 11 (AP).—Attorney General Charles J. Margiotti denied on the witness stand today he or any of his law partners ever took part or had any knowledge of a "tax grab scheme."

The 45-year-old attorney general gave his testimony at the trial of his criminal libel charges against the Philadelphia Inquirer, its general manager, Charles A. Tyler, and editor, John T. Custis.

Holding in one hand the article printed by the Inquirer September 29, Margiotti read. "Margiotti's law partners plan tax fee grab—scheme may net millions for lawyers." He then declared:

"Neither I nor any of my partners were connected with any such tax grab scheme.

"The first I ever heard of any such scheme was in reading the Philadelphia Inquirer."

Culbertson on Bridge

MR. CULBERTSON is acting as referee and reporter for a "grudge" bridge game. By general agreement he fines the players for their errors according to degree of stupidity. Class A errors cost them $1; class B, $2.50; class C, $5; class D, $10. This is the second hand in the series.

South was inclined to be mournful over the fact that he had made a redoubled small slam—a matter of 1,220 points—without getting the slightest reward. I reminded him solemnly that West had contributed $1 to the kitty because of his bad double. South only snorted. The next hand was dealt.

East, dealer.
North and South vulnerable.

	NORTH
	♠ Q 5
	♥ 8 7 4 3
	♦ K 8 5 2
WEST		EAST
♠ 4 3 2		♠ K J 9 6
♥ K J 10 6		♥ Q 9
♦ A J 9 7		♦ 6
	SOUTH.
	♠ A 10 8 7
	♥ A 5
	♦ 10 8 4 3
	♣ A 10 6

The bidding:

East.	South.	West.	North.
1 club	1 spade	2 dia'mds	Pass
2 no tr'mp	Pass	3 no tr'mp	Double*

*Final bid.

South knew his partner's double demanded a spade opening lead and his own length in the latter properly induced him to lead the spade seven. North's queen lost to the king. Declarer then led the king of clubs and, when South stayed off, followed with the jack. Since South's object in holding up had been to deprive declarer of a club communication from dummy to his own hand, he won the second round with the ace. To my amazement, instead of leading a diamond, he attempted a "hoax" play—underleading his heart ace, hoping North had the queen and declarer would guess wrong. (North, for his penalty double, had to have a diamond stopper, whereas East certainly should hold the heart queen for his no trump bid.) East won the heart in his own hand and ran off his four good clubs, then returned the heart, knocking out South's ace. The ace of spades was the defenders' only other trick, the contract being fulfilled with an overtrick.

North was the first to howl, "Class D, professor!" he yelled. And to his partner: "You're lucky I'm not the referee—I'd give you life!"

But I was not to be traduced.

"A bad play, undoubtedly," I said, "but class C is more accurate. I have to add another dollar for South's one spade overcall vulnerable on such a weak hand."

"Well!" chortled East "that's six bucks for the kitty!"

"Oh, the kitty will do better than that," I said. "You're fined $1 for that two no trump bid of yours, and West will have to pay the same amount for his two diamonds when he should have bid two hearts. You don't think, just because South made a rotten play, that you're going to get away with murder, do you? I don't judge by results!"

East and West muttered something under their breath, but they paid. South seemed grateful not to have been put in class D.
